BY BARTLEY CAMPBELL.

Kate, I've reached the cape, but there's no one here
To give me a friendly greeting;
I'm sitting alone, where we sat last year,
Where the waves and sands are meeting.
And the sky is full of an amber haze,
And the sun is slowly setting,
While my thoughts are full of those other days
Beyond all chance of forgetting.

The sands are as white as a year ago,
The waves tell the same old story,
And I think my cheek has its olden glow,
And my head its golden glory;
While the yachts that are skimming in and out,
Like birds on the breast of ocean,
Are the very yachts, I've little doubt,
That we saw last year in motion.

But there's nothing else like it was, dear Kate:
Fred. dumbly has gone to Paris,
And Harry has made Miss Chesser his mate,
And Ned has eloped with Miss Harris.
I might have been off the lists too, you know,
Had I snapped instead of parried,
But, alas! I would flirt with every beau,
Until even Jack got married.

I wish he'd return that lavender glove
I gave him once—we were sailing—
While he vowed his love by the stars above—
But I won't go on retailing;
The past is far past, and I know full well
There's little chance of recalling,
But I thank my stars I'm still a belle,
My years—well, not quite appalling.

Just think of it, Kate, I'm five years out,
Have had four distinct offers;
Have led in ball, excursion and rout,
'Till I've emptied papa's coffers;
A lock of my hair is in Zomcibare,
Under a brave soldier's jacket,
While the ribbon I wore, at the little church fair,
Is on a Delaware packet.

I do wonder what this "season" will bring?
But, pshaw! what's the use in guessing?
It's only an idle, meaningless thing,
And—there is the signal for dressing.
Now, Kate, I'll close this letter, my dear—
Is baby as sweet as honey?
And just think, you're a wife—how very queer,
And a mother—how very funny.

MODERN PLAYS.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY J. B. RENAULD.

It is not long since the sensational drama held the veins of popular approbation. Void of literary merit, and aimless as it was, for the most part, it could not retain its position in the affections of the theatre-goers very long. It is a fact, somewhat remarkable, that out of a score or more of recognized authors of sensational dramas, two of the most successful—Foster and McCloskey—are actors. The fact of their success over their brother playwrights is due more to the material they so opportunely used in their productions than the dramatic construction of the latter itself. In all they have offered to the public, so far, can be traced the ear-marks of the actor and none of the characteristics of the author or poet. Yet they are ahead of a great many of the sensational class of the dramatic school. For the protean and sensation dramas but little originality of material can be claimed. They are constructed of the thinnest fabric, aim at nothing and reach nothing—certainly not fulfilling the mission of the stage, "whose end, both at the first, and now, was and is, to hold, as 'twere, the mirror up to nature; to show virtue her own feature, scorn her own image, and the very age and body of the time his form and pressure." An impartial comparison between the quantity and quality of English and American dramatic compositions, would, undoubtedly, result in favor of the former; but if we compare simply the quantity, the lack of which illimited quantity cannot fill, the inevitable deduction will be in favor of the latter, for, of the modern English dramas none will bear off the palm of superiority in a simile with "Divorce," "John Garth," "Peril," and a few other equally meritorious productions. The preponderance of English over American dramas in this country may be accounted for in the almost reckless willingness of American managers to encourage foreign rather than native talent. Finding the American stage swarmed with English plays, for most part of one school, the native author was forced to turn his attention to the composition and introduction of a new class of dramas, and hence those who could have given us plays equal, at least, to anything emanating from a British pen, gave us the sensational. It is not to be wondered at, therefore, that we have had a surfeit of it.

Some of the most successful of the latter class have invariably proven to be unwarrantable, and, in some instances, transparent plagiarisms. A few of the successful ones have been dramatizations of foreign—nearly always French—plays, as in the case of Miss Keene's "Workingmen of New York," from the French of "Les Drames de Cabaret;" while among those who have, at best, managed to eke out a week's "opening" may be numbered some of the most flagrant impositions on an indulgent public—compositions as devoid of interest as they were of good grammar; full of incongruities, so unpleasant to the intelligent and discriminating; overdrawn characters and shadowy plots, the whole constructed without regard to unity of time, place and action, and the various incidents following in the most unnatural order—the reputed work of some well known for his brilliancy, who coolly tells us that "he writ it out of his own head." As a pleasant off-set to those may be noted plays by Gaylor, Daly, De Walden, Taylcure, and one or two others.

A drama which compels an actor in a leading part to remain on the stage at least half an hour without uttering one single line, having to be a silent spectator of the "star" performing his "specialties" after having vacated to make him laugh, is not calculated to elicit the admiration of the victim of such a badly constructed composition. In a "new" play produced in Baltimore last winter, the "heavy man" was supposed to be crushed by a huge rock dislodged from a mountain. While in that predicament, he had to speak nearly two "lengths" before he could "die." Where is the rational being who would not sympathize with the "poor actor," at least in this instance? Who will venture to say that, not even a Sabine could feel otherwise. Another class of drama, reprehensible in the extreme, is that which caters to the morbid tastes of a depraved body of people. Another still, which will not weigh less in the scales of unpopularity, is that of the Paul de Kock school. "Formosa," one of these, soon found itself wrecked on the shoals of popular opinion.

The author should not only seek to please, but also to instruct. As the drama is the most popular medium of education, so should it be the most beneficent in its general results. In man the author will find the best study for the exercise of his literary powers. It is an exhaustless subject, replete with most beautiful themes and ever fresh peculiarities, offering endless characters, and to the conscientious playwright can always use to the best advantage. When he seeks to delineate the ways of the groggery loungers and the vicious only, he, unwillingly perhaps, but effectively, courts the disapprobation of the wiser part of the theatre going public, and will, sooner or later, sink irretrievably in a literary grave. He should not take for his maxim that

"'Tis from high life characters are drawn,
A saint in crape is twice a saint in lawn,"

Neither should he scorn to paint from humble life, but out of the two form a picture which will touch the deep springs of thought and action, directing to noble aims, and not depend for success on the depraved tastes of the low and corrupt.

MEERSCHAUM.

Where Found and How Manufactured Into Smoking Utensils.

Most of the meerschaum consumed in Ruhla is imported directly from the manufacturers, or purchased at the fair in Leipsic. It is found in Marbechitz and Oslowan in Mahren, where it is found in large quantities between great deposits of serpentine. Spain, also, seems to be rich in meerschaum; at Escouche, Vellecos and Toledo, large quarries have been opened since 1830. Russia has recently obtained meerschaum of good quality from the Crimea, but that from Asia Minor has the highest reputation.

Meerschaum occurs in commerce in large blocks. In order to bring it into a convenient form for manufacture, it is soaked and rough cut up with a knife or handsaw. It is worthy of mention, in this connection, that the white meerschaum, by contact with water, acquires a yellow color. When the piece of meerschaum has been roughly cut into the form of the bowl that is to be made from it, the turner puts it into the lathe. It is astonishing with what elegance and rapidity this is executed. Our astonishment is still greater when we see the exquisite carving on the meerschaums executed with an ordinary knife. The bowls are brought while still moist into the drying chamber, which is kept at a temperature of 170 to 190 degrees Fahrenheit. Here they are allowed to dry undisturbed, and then are boiled in melted suet. After cooling they go to the finisher, i. e., the person who rubs them down with the horse-tail brush, an operation performed mostly by women and girls.

The best kinds of genuine, pure meerschaum pipes, when they come from the polisher, are put in boiling spermaceti or wax, which causes them to "color" more rapidly in smoking and renders them more durable and firm.

The white meerschaums are not more highly prized than those burned black inside and out, and which are distinguished by their beautiful gloss, so that they have become quite an important article of commerce. They are smoked by a man, while one-quarter to one-half an hour is tinned out, and then smoking them over burning pine chips until they are dark brown or black. They are then polished.

A smaller class are the bright red or oiled pipes, prepared by first boiling the rough pipe in fat, then shaving it off, grinding it and finally boiling it a second time. To give it the red color, dragons' blood is added to the oil, the quantity being regulated according to the shade desired. Carmine, gamboge and alcana are likewise employed as dyes.

So much for the manufacture of genuine meerschaums. If here and there the methods differ somewhat, the operation is essentially the same as described.

In the manufacture of pipes considerable chips and dust are produced. Both are carefully collected and are used in making the imitation meerschaum, which is vastly inferior to the genuine in quality. The reuse of the meerschaum is pounded up in a vessel with water. The coarse paste is put in a mill, consisting of two stones close together and ground still finer. A linen cloth is stretched across a large vat, and the mass is rubbed through this sort of strainer with the hands. It is then boiled in linseed oil with the addition of some alum. The oil gives to the counterfeit meerschaum the gloss of the genuine, while the alum serves to hold it together.

When the boiling is done it is run into molds and left in the drying chamber till the adherent water has evaporated, and it has acquired the consistency of soap. Having reached this stage it is easily made into any desired form and conveniently worked with a knife. The remaining operations are the same as in the case of the genuine.

The manufacture of artificial meerschaum, like that of the real, is not confined to round, smooth pipes, but extends to those ornamented with carving. The pipe is carved when but partially boiled and then subjected to a second cooking.

The manufacture of artificial meerschaum has almost acquired still greater dimensions than that of the genuine, the demand for both increasing from year to year. The factories in Ruhla and Vienna are the best; they excel all others in elegance of workmanship, peculiar polish and beautiful play of colors. Although in the United States there are considerable deposits of magnesite, serpentine and brucke, little, if any, meerschaum has thus far been found.

TACKLING THE TIGER.

The Story of a Night at Faro in Chicago.

Probably there is no man better known among the sporting fraternity in the southern and western country than Johnny Dowling. Socially he is genial and generous. In appearance he is a gentleman. He dresses in good taste, is temperate in his habits, and gambles because he loves it. The excitement of the gambling room is necessary, so he thinks, to his existence. The deep, sometimes almost unbearable quiet which hangs over and around the faro table, is to him a heaven of bliss; the click of the ivory check is music to his soul; the feeling which follows a heavy losing or winning, a pleasant change from the bustle or confusion of the noisy world outside. These characteristics also prevail to a greater or less extent with other members of the gambling fraternity.

A few evenings ago Dowling was seated at supper in the Merchants' Restaurant. Your first-class gambler is epicurean in his habits, and a plentiful supply of good things had been placed before him by jolly Sam, the tall waiter of the establishment. But Johnny was without an appetite and the dishes were untouched. Instead of eating, the man sat with his eyes fixed on vacancy, his head rested on one hand while with the other he drummed with a knife upon the table.

Dowling was in deep thought. Things were not prospering with him. Times were dull, and the new gambling law had made people suspicious. Besides, in the kindness of his heart, he had loaned a large amount to another "professional man," who had lost every cent fighting the tiger. After a few moments spent in study, Dowling arose and stepping up to the cashier's desk, paid his bill. When he laid down the money he said:—

"Charley, that five dollar note is all the money I have in the world.

He then remarked something about as well having none at all as such a little bit, and that he reckoned he would go over and "play it in."

The second floor of No. — West Madison street was crowded with professional and non-professional men, who had stepped in merely to gamble for awhile, and then, win or lose, to go away richer or poorer, as the case might be. Around the table which stood at the end of the long room were grouped nearly two dozen gentlemen, who were playing against the faro bank. The roulette table was deserted; the sweat cloth was without a customer; the poker tables were unoccupied. The many gas jets threw a bright light on handsome oil paintings; the side board was crowded with a tempting array of bottles; boxes of fragrant Havanas were at hand; while through a half open door was seen a dinner-table well supplied with all the delicacies of the season.

Dowling entered the room, and politely requested the "looker-out" to hand him over $4 worth of "white chips." A white check is the cheapest kind used by gamblers. Dividing his pile into two equal parts, he placed them on two of the cards which overspread the table. He won, and again and again he won. Then he changed his white checks for red ones and increased his bets. Each check now represented $5, and seldom was it he laid down less than a dozen on a single card. Occasionally he lost, but oftener he won, and one corner of the table was soon covered with his winnings.

Several piles were shoved toward the dealer and in their stead was handed him a "stack of blues." Each blue check was worth $50. Then the playing was continued. The hours passed away, and more than half the persons in the room when Dowling entered had gone home. The gamblers remained, for they saw that a big game was being played, and to them, next to the excitement of being a participant, is the chance to be a looker-on in such gigantic contests. At twelve o'clock the dealer stopped for supper and another took his seat. The silence, which had become almost painful, was broken by the words:—

"Shall we play it no limits?"

"Suit as you like, sir. Go on with your betting," was the courteous reply of the new dealer, who was the proprietor himself.

One by one the others stopped playing. Theirs was as but a mole hill beside a mountain. The dealer could ill afford to be bothered with one and two dollar bets when thousands were at stake. The blue checks had been exchanged for yellow ones, each worth $500. The waiter's attendant had fallen asleep on a sofa. The waiters had long since cleared the dining table, and outside, the street was no longer a busy, bustling thoroughfare. Across the way sleepy char-women stood for a few moments on the Sherman House steps, and then commenced their scrubbing. Daylight was breaking in the east, and across the calm, smooth waters of the lake already appeared the harbingers of the coming morn.

Dowling determined to make one final effort, and if he failed then the tiger's remorseless claws might stretch out and take his last cent. He looked at the case keeper and saw at a glance what the box contained. There was less than a dozen left, and among them were a deuce, a tray and the ace of clubs. Each one was a case card and he resolved to stake his all on one of these.

"I would like to double these or lose all and quit." He spoke the words slowly and very low; but the dealer heard them and he nodded his head. There was just thirty-three yellow chips in the three piles. Dowling placed them gently on the deuce, and then taking up three wooden checkers, he placed them on top of the three piles, thus "coppering them," as the phrase is.

Sixteen thousand dollars and upwards was a large sum. It was playing for high stakes, and possibly the dealer's hand might have trembled a little bit as he started to draw forth the few remaining pieces of pasteboard.

The forefinger and thumb of the left hand were placed on the uppermost cards, and one by one they fell either to the right or to the left. He was very slow, very cautious, very careful, and the man on the outside was very watchful. Once there was a queen on top in the silver box, and when the dealer began to push it out from its resting place there was a white show on the card beneath. It must be either the ace, the tray, or the deuce. If the latter, then Dowling would win; for the queen must fall on the farther pile. Gently the card was passed through the thin opening, and there lay the tray of diamonds. The dealer heaved a sigh of relief, and for an instant Dowling's face was pale with vexation. The dealer again commenced to deal the cards, and he had hardly started the tray when again there was a white show. He paused, and taking from his pocket a grain of coffee, placed it in his mouth. Dowling arose from his seat, and half leaning, half standing, whispered:—

"Go ahead mit the moosic."

He was not half so calm now as he wished to appear, however. He was timidly nervous and his pale face was much whiter than there was any need for. The dealer took the edge of the exposed card between the tips of the thumb and finger of his right hand and drew it out. The dence of spades was the next card, its two dark spots shining like immense diamonds to lucky Dowling, while to the proprietor they were the black emblems of misfortune.

Coolly taking up the cards and silver box, and the case-rack, the proprietor placed them in a drawer without ever saying a word. From the same receptacle he brought out a check-book, a bottle of ink and a pen. He counted over the yellow checks which were yet standon the same spot, and then he filled out a check on the — National Bank for $15,000, and signed his name. He then took from the till $1,500 and placed them beside the check. Then turning to Dowling he gave him his winnings and said:—

"Johnny, you have done that which the law could not do. You have closed this bank. Good night."

Butchers' wagons were rattling over the pavements; the street sprinklers had started to make their daily rounds; omnibuses for early trains were in the hotel doors; the newspaper carriers were hurrying to supply their customers, and newsboys were yelling as only they can yell, and the sun was already peeping above the house-tops on the east side, when Dowling left the room. An hour later he was enjoying a hearty breakfast, and later in the day, when "Charley" met him and asked him how he had prospered with his last $5 bill, Johnny told of how, after struggling all night long, he had clipped the claws of the strongest tiger in Chicago.—Chicago Times.

HOW CRIMINALS ARE BEHEADED.

SHOCKING INCIDENTS AT AN EXECUTION IN MECKLENBURG.

German journals just received give a most horrible account of the execution by beheading, with a sword, at Butzow, in Mecklenburg, of three murderers—Henry Scharfer, Peter Hopp and Francis Newmann. The crowd present consisted mostly of peasants, their wives and children. A scene for the scene it would have looked more like an American barbecue than an execution, for all present were eating and drinking, singing and chatting merrily. There were on the ground numerous venders of pies, cakes, apples and liquor, and even an Italian with a trained monkey attracted numbers of wondering spectators. The executioner and his assistants hurried somewhat rudely to the rear of the platform. Scharfer bared his man on high shoulders and a very short neck, tried to look indifferent and even defiant. His companions were evidently almost unmanned by their terror. Their faces looked deadly pale and they were hardly able to stand on their feet at the moment. The wretched Klein, who had been in the charge of officers under the scaffold, was led upon the platform. He wore the grey uniform of the convicts and was heavily ironed. He was evidently terrified and shed copious tears. After he had been placed near the judges, in front of the arm chair, the executioner approached Scharfer and told him audibly to sit down on the chair. The old murderer stepped almost jauntily to it and sat down. The doomed culprit still tried to die game, but the sight of the vast crowd seemed to daunt him. He heaved convulsively and his face turned almost purple. The president of the court now stepped forward and read the death warrant. Scharfer's respiration became more and more spasmodic. He cast wistful glances toward the executioner, who, as soon as the president ceased reading, rapidly stepped up to him. The culprit's neck was bared. When the executioner touched his skin Scharfer gave a start, and uttered a low, gurgling sound. Then his eyes were bandaged. One of the assistants seized him by the hair and drew up the head of the struggling criminal, while the executioner took the sword from the morocco case. He poised the flashing blade closely to the right side of the culprit's neck, and then deliberately cut into it. At the moment when the sharp edge cut into his flesh Scharfer gave a dull, convulsive start and drew up his knees, but it was soon over, for the headsman's sword passed surely through, somewhat slowly, the flesh and vertebræ with a horrible sound that was audible to a considerable distance and shocked the bystanders to their inmost. When the head fell off a stream of blood spurted three feet into the air from the trunk of the decapitated man. It was a ghastly sight. Every one turned pale, while the two wretched culprits who had witnessed the doom of their accomplice, turned white in their faces, and cordials had to be administered to them in order to prevent them from fainting away. Next the corpse was untied, and, together with the head, put into a coffin. The blood was wiped off with rags, the headsman dried his sword with a towel, and then sharpened it with a piece of steel. When all was ready he turned with an imperious gesture to Kopp, and exclaimed:—"Now, you step this way." The unfortunate man tottered to the fatal chair more dead than alive, and the same proceedings were gone through with as before. He moaned audibly during the reading of the death warrant, and when the executioner bared his neck, began to scream piteously. His yells, which made the blood of the hearers freeze, did not cease until the sharp blade of the headsman cut into the living flesh. He, too, gave a dreadful start when he felt the first sharp touch of the cold steel. The executioner did not cut very straight, for the blade came out near the shoulder and the head had to be cut off. Newmann was overpowered by it and fell into a long swoon. Hartshorn was administered to him, and when he awakened to consciousness, he, too, was led to the fatal chair and dispatched in the same manner as his accomplices. The whole execution lasted 40 minutes.

GIVE AND TAKE.—A Western traveler came to a log cabin and asked for a drink, which was supplied by a good-looking young woman. As she was the first woman he had seen for several days, he offered her a dime for a kiss. It was duly taken and paid for, and the young hostess, who had never seen a dime before, looking at it for a moment with some curiosity, asked what she should do with it. He replied what she choose, as it was hers. "If that's the case," said she, "you may take it back and give me another kiss."

HOLIDAY BOVINE; OR, CHEESE IT.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

You used to live here, didn't you?
When Holiday Bovine was 'round?
That nigger he'd butt a cheese in two,
For ther sake ov gittin' a pound.

I hev seen him git down on his knees,
And spring up at my beck,
And put his head cl'ar through a cheese,
And take it home 'round his neck!

Ah, yes, he's dead an' gone, long ago—
But he's left a name behind;
At heavy butting, high buck, or low,
He c'u'd butt a ram near blind.

Oh, he was a scrougin' old nigger,
He c'u'd git up an' make things walk;
He was skantown's champion jigger,
An' he c'u'd make ther old banjo talk!

Strangers w'u'd ov'en buy him a cheese
For ther fun ov seein' him butt;
Holiday Bovine w'u'd spring from his knees,
An' hole it as clean as a cut.

But a feller come through one day,
With a lot o' cheese to sell;
Holiday Bovine got in his way,
And tu'k to blowin' like—well

Ther feller thought he blowed too high,
So didn't stop to end;
Jest put yer Lead through this one—now try,
An' I'll give you my old waggin'."

An' he st'u'd ther cheese up on it's end,
An' smiled a smile o' sin,
Es he said "now look a hyar, my friend,
That it is, lest you go in."

That cheese was ov the biggest size,
An' it's kiverin' looked so nice!
An' Bovine swore 'twas a reg'lar prize,
An' he'd git it at any price.

So he t'u'k a start sum yards away,
With his head braced on his chest,
An' he broke for that 'ar cheese, they say,
Like thunder from ther west!

Wal, he struck it hard, but had to cave,
He'd got his match at last;
It smashed ther skull ov that poor slave,
An' his buttin' days was past.

That stranger, meanwhile, didn't lag;
No, his waggin' an' all was gone;
An' when he ripped up that cheese bag,
We found—solid gold grind-stone.

It's Holiday Bovine's tombstone now,
An' it talks big for his pluck;
That's writin' on it, which tells us how
"He struck his death through hard luck."

REMINISCENCES OF BOYHOOD.

Black Ike—Old Pete—Unrequited Love.

Among the servants on the farm I must not forget old Ike. We called him old, not because he was aged, for he was no more than seven or eight-and-twenty, but from that boyish familiarity with which youngsters speak of persons and things about them at school. Ike was a good servant and what we called "a real clever fellow," though he had but slender pretentions to cleverness in the conventional sense, as the reader will see. He was kind-hearted and industrious; but it was a standing joke with Dick Grim to tap the tip of his forefinger on his forehead with a shrug and a piteous look at him—an oblique insinuation respecting the furniture of his pericranium, at which Ike, being exceedingly passionate, would fly into a fury, which only increased the mirth of the surrounding imps. Ike was blind of one eye and deaf in both ears, and being distinguished for the brevity as well as the frequency of his ire, was sadly annoyed by the tricks of the young urchins, though he was too good natured to "tell." Poor fellow, he led a worse life of it than Caliban. Dick Grim was the leader of the gang, and they plagued his soul out. They put prickly pears in his shoes, stuck pins in his chair, tied up his harness (he officiated as groom among his other duties), and stole the key of the barn door. He was an inveterate lover of tobacco in all its forms, and was nearly always smoking a short pipe, which, when not in his mouth, was twisted up in his hat-band.

One summer afternoon Ike had a piece of harness to mend. It being pleasant weather, he carried it out under the cherry trees behind the house, and proceeded there to seat himself in his old chair, with his pipe in his mouth, to accomplish his task. From the unusual sagacity discernible in the manners of Dick Grim, and the interest which a dozen of us took in his motions, he evidently suspected some devilitry. Before assuming the chair he had carefully passed his hand over the seat, to insure against the latent enmity of pins and needles, and a minute examination of his hat had terminated in a consolitary conclusion that it had been embellished neither with molasses, prickly pears, nor cobbler's wax. The boys all gathered around, keeping up as brisk a conversation with him as his extreme deafness would permit, and, by various little pieces of torment, extorting from him the cries of "quit," "oh, don't," "mind yourself will you?" and other signs of discontent, to which most of us were too well accustomed to pay much attention. One "plumped" his naked foot with a marble, another tickled his ear with a straw on his blind side, while a third dropped a pebble down his neck. The good natured lad took these assaults with patience and resignation, and when Dick hallowed in his ear, "I say, Ike, how long have you had that pipe?" answered with unrefined civility, "No, I ain't got no eggs to-day, but I'll save one for you, Master Richard, when I find any." As he said this, Mr. H—— accidently passed, and stopped a moment by the group to issue some order. An unusual sensation seemed the result of his presence. Dick Grim turned a little pale, and three or four of the rest sneaked off. The mystery was suddenly solved by the explosion of the pipe, which had been loaded with powder beneath the tobacco. The bowl of the pipe and smoke hurt as well as frightened the negro, and even Mr. H—— had a clean white vest blackened and burnt. An investigation was instituted that evening respecting the authors of this nefarious gunpowder plot, but what was very curious, although not uncommon on such occasions, no one knew anything about it. After the affair was discussed ad nauseam for a week or two, Dick Grim and Jim White behind the barn, laughing obstreperously.

Another servant in the family was old Pete, also a black fellow, but in every way the opposite to Ike. Pete was of a true sable complexion, cross as a bear, ugly as sin, and always growling. He kept not only the boys, but Mr. and Mrs. H—— and all the masters, in awe. Yet there was never a more honest and useful domestic. It was his way. He was an ancient family servant, and put on airs. His grumbling was a chronic disorder. All day, all night—in pain, in pleasure—grumble, grumble, grumble. He was always foretelling evil and finding fault. His "ah" was invariably a preface to some dark prophecy or other. "Ah, wait a little," he would say to the boys when his ears were greeted with a particularly loud peal of laughter, "wait a few years and see who'll laugh then?" I may here observe that the predictions of Pete recoiled upon himself, as, in the subsequent years of his life, he was the victim of various misfortunes. He was bent double with the rheumatism and awfully visited with the gout; and after dragging through a cold winter, entirely dependant upon the bounty of his friends, he sank into the grave quietly one spring morning, grumbling to the very last.

Among the dumb beasts on the place there was a favorite little kitten—a pretty young thing, spotted like the shell of a tortoise, only the breast was more snowy and beautiful. It was named Rose. Its face was full of expression and, with a pair of large timid blue eyes, it made friends every where. A peculiar attachment existed between this creature and myself, which was broken off in the following manner:—I gradually began to perceive that her affection for me was cooling. She would no more leap into my lap, nor run around after her tail for my amusement, nor rub her glossy fur against my feet, but evidently avoided me. The mystery was unravelled by my detecting her one day behind the most privy, in company with a great, awkward, overgrown grey cat, with green eyes, a smutty nose, and altogether a most villainous appearance. Among what set of pots and kettles Rose had hunted up this blackguard none could tell, nor by "what charms, what witchcraft, and what mighty conjurations" he had ensnared the affections of a creature, delicate, innocent and lovely enough to nestle in the bosom of the proudest lady in the land. So, however, it was, and the new vagabond acquaintance grew bolder and bolder; at length they made no secret of their decided partiality, and were seen together more openly and frequently. To say the truth, my feelings were not a little wounded. My rascal seemed conscious of his impudent incivility, and never ventured near the house without evident signs of doubt, fear and reluctance. Some sense of propriety lingered in his bosom, which perhaps palpitated a little also on the score of prudence.

One day I saw Rose (I never cared for her afterwards—the flirt), caressing her ugly friend, and apparently persuading him into the house and up stairs. She fondled and fawned upon him—patted his filthy whiskered cheek with her white velvet paw—ran up the steps—looked back—ran towards him again, and, with all the language and eloquence of which she was capable, conjured him to enter. He looked at me with a misgiving countenance. Rose regarded me also with an expression of entreaty, till at length in they went, the new-comer describing a semi-circle around me, notwithstanding the reliance which he placed on Rose's representations. I actually mused for a few moments with a lover's melancholy upon this early disappointment in my affections, and I set Rose down as a arrant jilt, and a disgrace to her sex. Since that period, however, I have seen more of the world, and I find that it is the fate of man to be cheated, and that he may think himself well off who is jilted only by kittens.

AN AMBASSADOR OF DOUBTFUL SEX.

After the death of Louis XV, his grandson, Louis XVI, found among his grandfather's papers a great mass of correspondence between the Chevalier d'Eon and his grandfather; it is pretended that this correspondence revealed to the young King the secret of the sex of the Chevalier, and at the same time bore testimony to his noble character, his fidelity, and his talents. During the period of his residence in London, as minister plenipotentiary, he had been slandered to the King, Louis XV, who, believing the calumnies, for a time withdrew his confidence and credentials as ambassador; how far this confidence was subsequently regained we are not clearly informed, for the Chevalier, having made numerous friends in England, among whom were the Duke of Bedford, the Earl of Bute, Egremont, and Ferrers, Lord Halifax and many others, decided to remain in London; but after the pretended discovery of her sex, the King much desired that she should return to France. He offered her a further pension of 15,000 francs and a safe conduct to come to France, and, if she desired, to return again to England. This she refused, unless the King would give her a declaration, under his hand, of the falsity of the charges formerly made against her. This the King, after some demur, consented to do, and this safe conduct and the treaty or arrangement, signed by the King, were sent to her. Notwithstanding the knowledge the King pretended to have obtained of her sex, she was still treated as of the sex of which she wore the dress. In 1777 she went to Paris dressed in the uniform of her regiment of dragoons, was received by the King in private audience with much favor, but was ordered to adopt a female costume. She, however, visited her mother in her native town of Tonnerre, dressed in her uniform as a captain of dragoons. She returned to Paris on the of 14th October in the same year, when, in obedience to the orders of the King, she adopted the female costume and the female title of "Chevaliere" instead of "Chevalier," which she had hitherto borne, and continued to bear until her death. She earned her daily bread by teaching fencing in a house in the neighborhood of Soho square. She died, never having resumed malegattire, in the year 1810, at the age of eighty-two; and as if mysteries were never to cease respecting this singular personage, the body was examined after death by Dr. Copeland, of Golden Square, in the presence of Mr. Adair, Mr. Wilson, and the Rev. Father Elysee, a Roman Catholic priest, when it was discovered that the deceased was entitled to the male costume, which he had so gallantly borne in war, and in which he so greatly distinguished himself in diplomacy and the belles lettres.

"PUT ON THE BRAKE!"—That "O. D. Usa" correspondent of the NEW YORK CLIPPER sends us the following amusing incident:—Jim Young and Bob Brown were two chums, and roomed together in a fourth rate boarding house. Jim was employed as brakeman on a railroad, and Bob was a house painter. One evening Jim's train was delayed by an accident on the road—a very frequent occurrence, by the way, on that particular line—and, when he arrived home, found Bob had gone out. He therefore retired to rest without him. Not long after, Bob came home, and, finding Jim asleep, thought it an excellent opportunity for a practical joke, so, creeping noiselessly over to the bed, and placing his mouth close to the sleeper's ear, he gave a prolonged 'To-o-o-ot,' the signal for 'down brakes.' In an instant Jim seized him by the hair, and turning his head from left to right, in the same manner that he would the handle of a brake, cried, 'Put on the brakes! Put on the brakes!' How long Jim would have kept 'putting on the brakes' it would be hard to say, had not some of the boarders, hearing the noise, rushed in and rescued Bob, who, for some weeks, had a peculiar fashion of looking over his right shoulder. Jim affirms that he was sound asleep at the time, but Bob says 'he'll be darned if he don't sleep with one eye open, then!'"

MYSTERIOUS.—A correspondent, "F," sends us the following touching little story, which he vouches for as strictly true:—"Jones Garth" went "To Sea" with "Toodles," who was as "Cool as a Cucumber," having lived upon the "Sea of Ice" with a "Bottle" of cold beer. He had been on a "Long Strike" with an "Undergraduate," a "Mischief-making" young gent, who was always "The Right Man in the Wrong Place;" he was worth "1,000 Millions" of "Dollars" in "Hard Cash," who bought a "Wife for a Day," and then gave her to the "Swamp Angels" to be "Parted and Re-united" at the "Palace of Truth," where the "Pearl of Savoy," who was "Perfection," kept the "Old Forge," a relict of "Three Generations;" here "Robin Hood" became "King Carotte," and "Narcisse" became the "Prima Donna of a Night." This story is told by "Jack Cade," one of the "Robbers" roaming about in the disguise of a "Dutch Grenadier."

TO HER.

BY A NOVICE.

Never, since the sun arose,
With a pimple on his nose;
Never since the moon went down,
With an ink-spot on her gown;
While the stars burned in their sockets,
With their hands in trowsers pockets—
Have I seen a fairer maid,
Or more resembling marmalade!

Never, while the glad sun lasts,
Diademed with plaster-casts;
Never, while the moon endures,
Playing Weber's overtures;
While the stars continue winking,
In flannels warranted 'gainst shrinking—
Shall I see a maid as fair
Within five miles of Union Square.

Never, till the sun shall set
In a lackquered cabinet;
Never, till the moon shall sink
In the frozen skating rink;
Till the stars put up their shutters,
And make mud-pies in Five Points gutters—
Shall I that maiden cease to love.
(N. B.—John Smith composed the above.)

MERRY MOMENTS.

FISH SHOW.—The dispute as to the right Welsh word to be used for aquarium still continues. The latest authority says:—"As the best Welsh word for 'aquarium' I beg to offer 'Pysgddangosfa.' Every Welshman can sound 'Pysgddangosfa,'" he says. Happy Welshman!

KNOWLEDGE OF POKER.—In the course of a recent trial in this city, arising out of a gambling transaction, the judge asked "if there was any one in the room who could show how a 'cold deck' was 'rung in' in a game of poker." Extraordinary to relate, two-thirds of the spectators rushed for the witness stand. Such a crowd of witnesses was embarrassing, and the court concluded not to take testimony upon the points.

SANDY'S LEAP.—An astonished person is an object either of pity or levity. An instance occurred on a Scotch ferry boat illustrating surprise as the result of stupidity, and coming under both classifications. The boat was slowly leaving the landing place, and as the ropes were being thrown off a man rushed harriedly down to secure a passage. He gathered himself for a tremendous leap, and, springing, landed far upon the deck of the boat. It was as much as a full minute before he could stand erect, and then, turning, his comical expression was explained by his words, "Eh, mon, what a leap!" The boat was then about seventy feet out

SATURDAY, AUGUST 17, 1872.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

☞ We never answer questions by mail. All addressed to us seeking information will be answered through this column only.

GEO. BURNAM, Waverly, Iowa.—1. The capital required to start a bowling alley company would be an amount necessary to cover the following expenses:—The printing used in advance; the traveling expenses to first places of performances; the expenses of the advance agent; hall rent and licenses, and a sinking fund of $10,000. 2. All persons against should be active, energetic, of good address, have a thorough knowledge of all the halls, hotels and lines of railroad and steamboats in the country and their prices, and acquaintances with the local editors of the newspapers, the bill posters and their prices together with a vast amount of other information to be obtained only by actual experience.

HARRY, Philad'a.—1. Your partner had no right to call for your last card and go alone; the rule says that "should a player play with more than five cards, the party so offending is debarred from counting any points made in that deal," and if he is the dealer the deal is lost. 2. You cannot call for your partner's best card. It is not a bad hand, considering the number of games played. 4. You will get the CLIPPER earliest by purchasing of a newsdealer.

CITIZEN, Hartford.—A stakeholder has a perfect right to withhold the money until he sees both bettors together, so that he may be satisfied the bet is won and lost. Having no interest in the stakes, he is justified in doing this for his own protection. In the case you mention, the party you bet with might safely object to the bet being decided by the authority you produced (a foot rule), and as the stakeholder was not named as the party to decide the bet, you were premature in claiming it of him.

INQUISITIVE, Keokuk, Iowa.—In the issue of the CLIPPER to which you refer you will find a report of the game between the Athletics and Boston, in which the latter scored 1 to the Athletic's 9. It is somewhat of a hardship that after making a benign joke, as we thought, we have to go to the trouble of pointing out the meaning of the same; but "anything to beat Grant."

J. D., Louisville.—1. It was foul, unless the claim was that B. after striking his first ball, had struck an object ball other than that pocketed by him. In that case he could count the ball, and play on. 2. If the player, before striking, and while preparing to play, hits an object ball, he is entitled to a stroke for safety. In no other case, at common hazard, is he.

GEORGE S. W., Philadelphia.—Billy Edwards and Tim Collins fought near East New York, L. I., on the 26th of May, 1871, darkness stopping the mill after they had contended 2 hours and 15 minutes. No arrests were made. Both were arrested the same night, tried and sentenced to imprisonment on Blackwell's Island, the stakes being afterwards drawn.

HARRY PROVOST, Jr., Lewis, Mo.—No. 1. George M. Kelley leaped over sycamore horses at Corinth, Miss., Aug. 24th, 1865, which is the best authentic record. It has been stated that he has since leaped over twenty-two, but the necks of the horses were closely packed together, and not their bodies, therefore, such leaping does not go upon the record.

RAFFLER.—The party owning the ring had no right to increase the chances from ten, the original number, to sixteen, without the unanimous consent of all the members. They were bound to pay, and it was a piece of sharp practice on the part of the proprietor of the raffle, which is far from creditable to him.

HARRISBURG.—"A man runs past first base in a direct line, does turn to the left and touches that base. Is he out?..... No. When he turns to the left to run to 2d he then forfeits the privilege of exemption from being put out, and must be touched while off his base before he can be given out.

M. D., Detroit.—The official returns of the North Carolina election having decided in favor of the republican candidate, B. must return the same number of cigars you gave him, and, in addition, give you an equal number as the penalty of his losing the wager.

GAMESMAN, Cincinnati.—"A man bats a ball in the in-field, and the in-fielders picks up and passes it to first base; the base runner gets to first at the same time that the ball does. Is the base runner out or not?" Not out; as the ball must be held on the base before the striker reaches it.

POKER.—"A holds a pair of kings, pair of queens, and an ace; B holds an ace, a queen, jack, ten and nine. It is agreed that straights shall count as best two pairs, the ace counting both ways. Which is the winning hand?".....A wins. The other is not a straight, as the king is not there.

W. H. S., San Francisco.—Selma and Fadladeen's time, 1:43, was the fastest time for a mile on record, until Alarm made his record of 1:42¾, at Saratoga, July 17th, 1872. You do not say on what days you made your bet; if before that day, you win; if after, you lose.

EZEKIEL, Baltimore.—Under the circumstances, it may be proper to await the result of the legislative investigation, unless the gentleman is known to be a fair man, in which case the money might be paid to him, to be returned should Merrimon be declared honestly elected.

H. D. Z., Philadelphia.—According to the official returns, you lose; but should fraud be discovered, and the election proved to have been carried by fraud, then, in the event of Caldwell being unseated, by legislative power, you would be a winner of the wager.

J. L. G. S., Concord.—1. We prefer Barnes and Anson. 2. In case the catcher of a nine should throw something that resembles a ball over the 2d baseman's head, and a striker should attempt to run in, if the catcher should touch him he would not be out, by right.

C. H. S., Philadelphia.—Your question is not clearly put, but, according to our understanding of it, P. had no right to the quarter at all, and should not, without the consent of the owner, have upset the exchange; by taking the note, P. made himself responsible.

S. W. J., Brashear City, La.—At anction pitch A is eight, 3 eight, and C nine. B gives A two points, which puts A out, it makes low, game and C high. Which goes out first, A or C?.....C, being at nine, with but one to go, his high puts him out first.

ROMULUS.—1. The first recorded ring fight in this country was between Jacob Hyer and Tom Beasley, in 1816. 2. Wm. Tobyne was born at Lewiston, Del., April 26th, 1832, stands 5 ft. 6 in. in height, and his fighting weight was 130 lbs.

M. M., Middletown, Md.—1. It is customary to turn down sweeps as fast as raised. If the dealer can demand of the player on his right hand to cut the cards. The running of them without being cut is only a matter of sufferance.

C. R. R., St. Louis.—1. B cannot raise A's "eights" to "tens." 2. If the 8th sight lay on the table and B had a 9th he can match or build with his other cards. he must call in his "eighths."

KENNEDY, Philadelphia.—"A and B are playing casino. There is a 9 and a four on the board. A's turn. A's tray on the deece and calls it five. Can B play an ace on the four and put it on A's five, and call it ten?".....He cannot.

M. EDMANS, Buffalo.—1. The work written by an English author, and published in England. 2. The paper you refer to purchased the story in good faith a long time ago, but has not had an opportunity to use it until recently.

C. G. F., Helena, Ark.—1. A partner cannot assist at euchre and go it alone. 2. There is no rule governing the use of the imperial card. The decision of the local party must be abided by.

POUNCE, Louisville, Ky.—No. I had perfect right to raise his bid from two to three, no other bid having intervened. No. 3 should not have been so tardy in his operations.

THOMAS, Little Rock, Ark.—Send $4 to Ed. James, as per advertisement, $6 for Dobson's book on the banjo, or $3 for Converse's book.

MARIANA, Rochester, N. Y.—Such an organization, if properly managed, ought to pay, but much would depend upon the management.

A. F. N., New Orleans.—1. The Eckford Club did not play the Mansfields August 6th, the Atlantics beating the latter on that day. The question has yet to be decided. 2. We prefer Spalding.

A. V. R., Chicago, Ill.—There are many banjo performers whose only source of instruction has been the published books, but it would be better to place yourself under an experienced teacher.

SUBSCRIBER, Placerville, Cal.—The two 40's win the first and second prize, and throw off for choice; the two 30's have no claim to second prize.

SARATOGA ROSES.—It was originally published in the CLIPPER. We have no knowledge of it having been set to music, though it is possible it may have been.

J. D. S., Philadelphia, Pa.—Bernard Macauley is the manager of Wood's Theatre, Cincinnati, O., and he was born in New York City.

J. MCR., Pittsburgh.—Bradley defeated Rankin at Point Abino, C. W., for $3,000, in 183 rounds, 2 hours and 35 minutes, Aug. 1st, 1871.

C. D., Philadelphia.—He was willing to receive the fac simile presented, but he never obtained it.

SUBSCRIBER, Pittsburgh.—Cannot tell you where they are, except that Mills is still with the Mutuals.

C. S., Chicago.—The game is drawn, unless you were playing, by special arrangement, the "count out" game of 11 holes 3 pallets. 2. Blue Gown's Derby time was 2:43¾, which is nearly 1:49 to the mile. 3. There is no official racing time in England.

W. H.—The bet still stands, having been simply tacitly waived in the absence of any agreement, for the stakes being, of course, payable whenever the two parties to the wager played together.

TOM, Murray, Cincinnati.—Tom Allen was matched with Jas. C. Gallagher since his (Allen's) fight with Mace, but he has not met Peter Gallagher since 1860, when he twice fought him.

T. F. KILGALLAN.—King was knocked out of time in the 17th round, but he was allowed several minutes grace—nearly five minutes having elapsed when they again faced their other.

ROSCO, Jerseyville, Ill.—Tom Hyer was called to Waterville, Oneida Co., N. Y., in the spring of 1843. Her sire, Kentucky Hunter, stood at Sangerfield, Oneida Co., N. Y.

CARD.—Neither is out, unless they were playing the "count out" game by special agreement, and in that case, he who first claimed the game is out.

TOWNVILLE.—It was a pool, as neither Alroy or Monarchist were entered in the race, and the winner, Susan Ann, was not included in the sweep.

SARGENT, Black River Falls, Wis.—Yes, he is the same person. His given name is Albert, and a letter addressed in care of this office will reach him.

DEVERE, Lincoln, Ill.—Unless you have practiced before, you cannot learn to be a contortionist very soon; it requires a long time and much practice.

A. B. S., Pittsburgh, Pa.—Good double clog and double song and dance performers get on an average a salary of $40 or $50 per week for the two.

SUB, Baltimore.—The judiciary committee decided the Athletic-Baltimore disputed game a stand off, consequently, all bets on that game are null and void.

THE RING.

THE BIG FIGHT ON THURSDAY NEXT BETWEEN

Ed. O'Baldwin and Jim Mace, for the Championship and $2,000.

Just now converse and discussion upon all subjects foreign to that of the approaching pugilistic meeting between the Colossus of the prize ring, Ned O'Baldwin, and England's lightest champion, Jim Mace, is tabooed in places where members of the sporting fraternity are wont to congregate. But a brief period will intervene between now and the arrival of the day agreed upon for the encounter, Thursday, Aug. 15th inst. as we write, the principals, accompanied by a few friends, are en route to the scene of conflict, while those who purpose witnessing the mill are busy making their final preparations for the journey, and others are anxiously inquiring for information as to the manner of getting to the battle ground. The utmost secrecy has been observed thus far in regard to the location chosen for the fight, and the point or points from which it is the intention of those having the arrangements in charge to convey excursionists to the ensuing mêlée, and only those who are known to be of the right stripe being entrusted with that much sought after knowledge. If this considerable secrecy be preserved as religiously elsewhere as it has been in this city, there will be little occasion to anticipate magisterial interference, which some have apprehended, and which has been threatened in certain cities, from whence it had been stated, the rendezvous would start, or in the vicinity of which, rumor said it was in contemplation to pitch the ring. Many here have been on the anxious seat for several days, and those who have sought in vain until now have precious little time left in which to obtain the desired "tip," for 'tis doubtful if the traveler who delays his departure from Gotham until the evening of the 13th inst., will be able to make connection in season with the conveyances which is to take the spectators to the chosen land. From the activity which has latterly been made apparent among the adjournment in the metropolis, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Boston, Washington, Richmond and Pittsburgh, there is reason to expect large delegations from each of the cities mentioned, which, with those from other localities nearer to or more remote from the border of the Old Dominion, will, it is believed, swell the throng present into very large proportions. During the past few days the rival gladiators, having reduced themselves sufficiently in flesh, tough'd a nod that which remains until it bears a leather-like appearance and brought their muscles into a state of adamantine hardness, have been easing up in their training, resting themselves after the severe labor which they have performed, in order that they may be the better prepared to endure the tax upon their physical powers which is yet to come. They left their respective training quarters—Mace at the Highlands, Keversink, N. J., and O'Baldwin on the outskirts of West Philadelphia—on the morning of Monday, 12th inst., taking their departure so quietly that few were aware of their going. Johnny Dwyer, of Brooklyn, and one or two more interested parties, accompanied the "big fellow," while Pooley Mace and others went with Jim by rail from Jersey City. Joe Coburn, on the part of Mace, and Mart. Killacky, on behalf of O'Baldwin, have made all necessary arrangements for transportation, Joe having left the metropolis for that purpose last week, returning on the night of the 10th to report progress, and leaving again on the following evening. The seconds of the Giant will, in all likelihood, be Dwyer and Tom Kelly, of St. Louis, Mo., who was Ned's traveling companion in a sparring tour in the west last fall; those who will handle Mace, unless present plans are altered, will be his quondam opponent, Joe Coburn and Owney Geoghegan, who was one of the latter's seconds against him in the Canada affair. Now that everything connected with this very interesting match, which may be said to have been in embryo for years, has, up to the present time, gone on so satisfactorily, it is to be earnestly hoped that the part which is yet to come may not be characterized by anything calculated to mar the harmony—that the battle may be what the articles call for, a fair stand-up fight, and that no attempt be made to interfere in any way with the man who proves himself to be the superior of his adversary, and to whom the victory may rightfully belong. The CLIPPER will have a representative on the ground, who will furnish our readers with a complete and reliable report of the affair in our next issue.

EDWARDS AND CHAMBERS' MATCH.

General satisfaction has been afforded the admirers of pugilistic pastimes by the selection of Arthur Chambers as the opponent of Billy Edwards in the coming fight for the championship of light-weights and one thousand dollars a side, which is to take place within five hundred miles of this city on the 4th of September. In the matter of weight and size, Bat Mullins, the boxer who it was at first supposed would be Billy's antagonist, is a more suitable match for him, but, though the manner in which he cut down good men with the gloves in various contests beyond the Atlantic demonstrated beyond question that he possesses great scientific ability, the superior ring record and greater experience of Chambers impressed them favorably the sporting public; besides he is pretty well known, personally, throughout the States, having frequently exhibited his skill in different cities, invariably giving satisfaction by the character of the displays made. While this greater familiarity with the antecedents of Arthur, gained by perusal of the published account of his career, his personal appearance, and the knowledge of his qualifications as a pugilist obtained from practical illustration, naturally imparts greater general interest to the contest than if a comparatively unknown man (on this side the Atlantic) was Edwards' rival, it at the same time furnishes a solid foundation upon which to base opinions, and enables ring-goers to approximate to something like correctness in their estimate of the relative chances of the combatants in the approaching passage at arms. Therefore, without saying anything detrimental to Mullins, who has undeniably shown great cleverness, we think that good judgment has been shown in naming Chambers as the unknown, notwithstanding that he will be some pounds the lighter than on the day. The match is a good one, and should nothing go amiss, those who attend the meeting will witness a stubbornly-contested and scientific battle, which we trust nothing may occur to prevent the best man winning. Edwards continues his training at the Highlands, N. J., and is looking extremely well, being now well down to weight. Chambers has done considerable work the past week, taking his walks abroad from his house, 262 Market street, Newark, N. J., under the supervision of Bat Mullins, and is, we believe, already below the stipulated figure, 126lbs. He is quite confident that the issue of the battle will be favorable to himself, and seems rejoiced that his repeated efforts to get on a match with somebody here have at last proven successful. It is the intention of both men to remain where they are now located until such time as it will be necessary to take their departure for the fighting ground. On Saturday, Aug. 24th, the final deposit, $500 from each must be staked, at which time also the choice of ground will be tossed for and a final stakeholder appointed. Chambers is to take a benefit at the Arbor, 20 West Houston street, on the evening of Saturday, Aug. 17th, for the purpose of raising the funds necessary to liquidate the expense incurred in training, as well as to afford his friends an opportunity to note his form of which will be faced in the ring-up by Bat Mullins, which attendance would be sufficient to fill the hall, for besides the great desire to take stock of Arthur, within so short a period of the fight, those who didn't see these men box at Mullins' exhibition won't get a chance to miss it again.

GEORGE SEDDONS to TIMONY and KELLY.—Understeath we present a communication from George Seddons, to which we call the attention of those to whom reference is therein made:—

NEW YORK, August 12th, 1872.

EDITOR NEW YORK CLIPPER.—DEAR SIR.—Knowing from good authority that Ted Timony (who is now matched with Kelly) has stated that, assuming he wins the present contest, he will not be satisfied until he has an encounter with me, and also as Kelly has always stated he should like to fight me, provided he could find the money, I think it would be a good idea if the winner of this coming fight would leave on deposit the full amount of the stakes, viz. $1,000, in the hands of the present stakeholder, so that there will be no excuse for them not making a match according to their assertions, and I will immediately cover the same. As I mean business and not words, I trust that I shall receive a definite and satisfactory answer to this. Yours, respectfully,

GEORGE SEDDONS.

FRED. SMITH gave a sparring exhibition at Broderick's Hall, Troy, N. Y., on the evening of Aug. 8th, the attendance being fair, and the following persons assisting:—Walter Hackney and Reavey, B. Kelly and Tom McGuire, Leafy and friend. The wind-up was between Smith and Broderick, and, though it wasn't much of a display, scientifically considered, it seemed to give satisfaction.

TIM COLLINS arrived in the metropolis from Boston, Mass., on the 11th inst., on his way to attend the Mace and O'Baldwin fight on Thursday. He called on us on the 12th and withdrew the one hundred dollars deposited by him some time ago for a match with Seddons' unknown, saying that he had concluded to give up fighting altogether. The injury he sustained a few weeks since is very severe.

OWNEY GEOGHEGAN has taken the City Assembly Rooms, corner of Twenty-second street and First avenue, embracing two large halls, one of which he proposes to let for balls, etc., and the other for sparring exhibitions. The latter will hold, we learn, about 1,200 people, and is fitted with a stage, erected in the centre of the room.

PATSEY SHEPPARD, who has just returned to his home in the city of Elms from Wisconsin, where he seconded Dan Carr in his recent fight with Mike O'Connor, desires us to publicly return his thanks to James Bigelow and Charley Kelly, of La Crosse, for their kindness during his stay. Patsy expresses himself much pleased with his trip.

MIKE TRAINOR, who for some weeks was laid up by an attack of general debility, has so far recovered as to be able to attend to business, which will be pleasing news to the numerous friends of the conqueror of Dick Keating, fourteen years ago.

WE HAVE LETTERS for Patsy Sheppard, Jimmy Gallagher, Jack Goulding and Jim Smith.

"THE CAT."—A "CURVIN' OF THE SPINE."

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

Thar was a chap named Bobbie Lake, who lived on Water street;
He bossed a speckled Thomas cat, that hone in York could beat;
He'd catch more rats and mice and sich than forty cats could eat,
As you recall in the history of the feline race complete;
And there he'd sit and lick himself, and purr so awful queer—
That Bobbie Lake would yell at him, but still he'd purr—severe.

Oh, this here cat of Bobbie Lake's was terrible to see;
He'd cry precisely like he was in painful agony;
You'd surely think a nurse's pin had stuck a small baby,
And all the mothers in the street, waked by the horrid din,
Would rise right up and search their babes to find that worryin' pin;
And still his feline majesty would keep a hollerin' like sin.

But while "a curvin of his spine," and waiting to attack
A Tom cat on the other fence, that came an awful crack;
And this audacious Thomas cat got busted in the back.

Moral.

Now all young men whose tender hearts this painful tale does rack,
Just take this moral to yourselves, of all both white and black,
Don't ever do like this here cat, be "sittin up your back."

"DEAD OR ALIVE."

A NEW DRAMA BY TOM TAYLOR.

The drama bearing the above title was produced for the first time in London, Eng., on July 22d, at the Queen's Theatre, Mr. and Mrs. D. E. Bandmann acting the chief characters therein. It is a dramatization of one of Balzac's novels, which supply a mine of wealth to the dramatist. From "Le Colonel Chabert" Mr. Taylor has taken the leading incidents which form the three acts of the drama. It is thus spoken of by the Sunday Times:—As it stands, the character of the heroine of "Le Colonel Chabert" would attract few actresses. Scarcely a shred of human sympathy attends a woman who is false to every highest instinct of her nature, and who deliberately mangles the hand that has fed and supported her. A comparison of the two stories will show the manner in which the Englishman has treated the work of his illustrious predecessor. Le Colonel Chatert has taken part in the final charge of the French cavalry at Eylau, and has received a sabre cut, by which he is supposed to have perished. So completely gone is all appearance of life, he is thrown, with the slain in the battle, into a fosse, which becomes a common grave. By accident, however, he contrives to revive, and, on recovering sensibility, to the top of the pit, and succeeds with difficulty in drawing attention to himself. He is then taken to a hospital, where the influence of his fearful wound is such that he falls into a series of fits of the most violent description. The effect of these is to alter his appearance until he is scarcely recognizable. Returning to France, after a long stay in Germany, he finds his wife married again, and in possession of the property of her husband. His efforts to prove his identity are vain. He is without friends or money, and his story that he is a man the tale of whose death has obtained universal credence produces nothing but laughter. Fortune at length allows a gleam of light to fall upon him. He meets with a young and enterprising notary, whose sympathy he succeeds in enlisting. Proofs of his identity are not wanting, being in the hands of the surgeon who first attended him after the battle. In order these available, however, must be a matter of difficulty, the French laws being unwilling to disturb such bonds as the second marriage of the wife, from which two children have resulted, unless the evidence was the clearest conceivable. A compromise is accordingly suggested by the notary, who knows how much more expedient will be such a course than open hostilities. Reluctantly Chabert consents to this and a meeting between the two is arranged. The start of surprise of the wife, who recognises by certain indices that this is no impostor, but her actual husband, is followed by a sudden determination to resist him. She sees with pleasure that his appearance is unrecognisable. Ultimately finding in him the chivalrous nature he always possessed, she changes tactics, recognises him, and, appealing to his affection, urges him not to compromise her honor, but to make on her behalf a sacrifice which she knows to be within his power. Her Delilah-like efforts are for a time successful. Chance, however, betrays to the colonel that he has been duped, and in his rage he breaks off all connection with her. The result may be briefly indicated. By the influence of her second husband he is confined in Charenton as a lunatic. His statements are treated as evidence of a diseased brain, for which blood on his head is sufficient account, and he spends the joyless remainder of his days shut up, a sane man among madmen, while his false wife lives in splendor upon the property of which she has defrauded him. Thoroughly Balzacian is all this. Its objection for stage purposes is the unparalleled baseness of the woman. To get rid of this has been the chief object of the adaptor, who has shunned the difficulty with some skill in the process of so doing. He has reduced the character of the woman to a nullity, and has turned the entire interest upon the man so shamefully wronged and oppressed. The colonel—now christened the Comte de Maurienne—is seen in his happy married life, a position to which Balzac does not show him. He is about to take part in the battle of Austerlitz, and his wife has so strong fears for his life she succeeds with great difficulty in getting him sent on an embassage to Berlin. That he escapes from this care, takes part in the battle, is wounded, and left for dead, is due to his personal intercession with Napoleon and the interference of a certain Marquis de Laval, who loves his wife, and hopes to call her his as soon as the hair-brained husband has received his quietus from sabre or from bullet. The first act closes with the march of the colonel to the battle field at the head of his men, a picture effective from a spectacular as well as from a dramatic point of view. Eighteen years elapse, and the colonel is seen at the commencement of Balzac's novel, trying vainly to enlist sympathy or to find any one who will believe in or befriend him. His wife, however, is dead, and in her stead is her daughter, a girl named after herself, and transmitting her features and virtues. The traitor's part is now played by the second husband of the deceased woman. The Duke of Laval, formerly the marquis, comes accidentally upon the papers which establish the claim of the colonel, seizes them and destroys them. In the office of the lawyer the colonel sees his daughter, whom he at first takes for his wife. Subsequently he avows himself the father. His words and manner make some impression upon Melanie. Her lover, however, a young physician, happens to be present and recognises in the colonel a patient he had attended at Charenton. At the suggestion of the doctor, who sees that the madman is incurable, the husband and children affect to pretend not to recognise him as her father, and uses the stratagem of luring him back to Charenton under the pretence that she is taking him to her own house. She repents of her stratagem, however, when she finds from evidence he has supplied her concerning her own jewels, inherited from her mother, that he is, indeed, her father, and she hastens to make atonement for the wrong she has done. Barely in time to save herself from life-long remorse is she, as the colonel, feeling this the most cruel of the many wrongs he has suffered, is about to commit suicide. Not without difficulty does she undo the wrong she has done. At length the old man is appeased and made happy as the doctor signs an order for his release. This, however, is marred by a special order from the ministry for his detention, obtained by the duke. The ultimate safety of the colonel and his exultation to fame and fortune are due to some comic details he has made—one a lawyer's clerk and the other a vivandiere. These find in the lining of an old knapsack, formerly belonging to the father of the former, who was the colonel's orderly sergeant, papers which are duplicates of those the duke has destroyed. So strong and unmistakable is the evidence these supply, no influence can resist it, and the colonel finds himself in the position he formerly enjoyed, and is able to reward with the hand of his daughter the doctor who has been instrumental in conferring upon him many things which a less generous nature would probably not regard as obligations. All this is decidedly weaker than Balzac. It is yet strong enough to form the basis of a successful and interesting drama. There is genuine strength in part of the work, and the central figure stands out full of dignity. The play may be pronounced a decided success, and made a chance, after its brief summer run is over, of being revived with a favorable prospect of a prolonged existence.

WHO ORIGINATED THAT CAT AND DOG FIGHT?

The authorship of the "Pugnacious Purp" or the "Cat and Dog Fight," originally published in the NEW YORK CLIPPER in March, 1870, is raising quite a breeze among doggerel writers, and promises to excite as much discussion as did the question of the authorship of "Beautiful Snow." "Sim Pelton," over whose nom de plume we first gave it to the readers of the CLIPPER in 1870, charges that Dan Emmett, who e version recently appeared in our columns, pilfere i it from him, Pelton; whereas Dan, on the other hand, claims that his, Dan's version was originally published in 1857. Owing to a delay due to Mr. Emmett to say that his version was sent to us several months before we concluded to publish it, but not, however, until some time after "Sim Pelton's" appeared in our columns. In reply to the latter's charge against Mr. Emmett, we are requested to give publicity to the following:—

CARE,—CHICAGO, Aug. 1st, '72.—EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.—DEAR SIR:—I EXPLAIN," and it shall be my last. About two years since I sent you a copy of a description of a battle between a bull dog and a tom cat. In our correspondence you stated that you had already published a somewhat similar piece of the sort, in either four or five verses. Now, will you please state in the CLIPPER whether or not in this I am correct? And furthermore, will you please republish the "garbled version" of which you speak, in order that the public may [I judge which is the genuine? I will add that friends would be pleased to see once more what it reads like. That my verses, as published in your paper, were sung in this city in '67, I can prove by every "professional" that was then in the city of Chicago. Your song like that, viz., the "Cat and Dog" is picked up in whole or in parts, and taken from one city to another, and everybody claims it! If my friends will forgive me, I will never again put my name to such a piece of nonsense. If Mr. James H. Stuart, of Pascagoula, Miss., is still anxious to know who I am (as I know what he is by the tone of his letter), I would most politely inform him that I am a composer of several popular songs, in times past, that had quite a run, amongst which were "HUM DADDY," "JACK ON THE GREEN," etc., and, I am proud to say, of "DIXIE!" As I cannot descend to answer his letter in the same strain in which it was written, I will merely say that I hope he will not (as he threatens) "fix my mouth so that it won't hold soup," as I have had it filled quite often this winter by our Relief and Aid Society, and may yet have occasion for the same process. I am now an old man; my fighting qualities have been sadly neglected, and I hope Mr. Stuart will have some compassion on my grey hairs. In the meantime, I remain the public's as well as Mr. Stuart's, very humble servant, DANIEL D. EMMETT.

N. B.—I would inform Mr. S. that he is the first gentleman (?) that ever accused me of stealing music, or "literature" of the "cat doggerel" stripe, and I would advise him to apply for a patent, in order to secure the advantages of his valuable discovery. To the following certificates I respectfully direct Mr. Stuart's particular attention. By them he will see that my verses were sung as far back as 1867:

I hereby certify that I sang the verses of the "cat-doggerel," as published in the CLIPPER, over Mr. Dan Emmett's signature, in the Jupiter Concert Room, in Chicago, in the winter of 1867, and I had never heard or seen those verses prior to receiving them from the said Emmett. ROBERT A. LINDLEY, Banjoist.

I certify that I heard Mr. Lindley sing the same at the time stated above. J. TAYLOR, Jig Dancer.

We, the undersigned, witnessed both Mr. Lindley and Taylor sign the above. JOHN H. GUERIN, TOMMY MORRISSEY, JOHN NEILAN, LEW WALLACE,
J. J. WILLIAMS, A. P. KAVANAGH,
FRANK B. SWEETLAND.

[We cannot spare the space to republish the verses, but we have compared them, and find that the ideas are similar, and, in some instances, the same language is used in both; Sim Pelton's poem contains five eight-line verses, while in Mr. Emmett's there are ten four-line verses, being the same lines in each. It's a question of veracity between the two claimants, only this, and nothing more."—ED. CLIP.]

NEW TEETH IN OLD AGE.—In an article on "Longevity" Prof. Owen has explained how it is that aged persons are said to have cut new teeth late in life. Many readers will remember to have heard or read of such occurrences, which are regarded as extraordinary. The facts are these. It often happens that teeth break or decay, and leave a stump in the gum. The gum closes over the place, and the incident is forgotten. As years go by the jaw and the gums shrink, and the long-buried stump is in consequence laid bare, and is hailed as a new tooth, and is sometimes mentioned in the newspapers as a kind of wonder. Thus a "fact" is shown by competent authority to be an error and it is always well for public opinion to get rid of an error.

BONES ATTENDS A FETE CHAMPETRE.

INTERLOCUTOR.—You look a little sunburnt to day, Mr. Bones. Have you been out among the haunts of nature for a day's sport?

BONES.—Why, not egzac'ly, dough I did try to do somethin in dat line on my own hook. No; been 'tendin a fete shameter, dat's all. Praps you'll say dat aint no great feat, but as de gals up our alley all likes to foot it on de light fantasticums, de boys t'ought dey'd take advantage ob der perwailin hot spell by gittin up one ob dem skurshins, so we laid in a few bushels of clams and bout twenty gallons ob old Jamaica, and a pitcher of lemonade, and a box of crackers.

INT.—Why, sir, it appears to me that your chief repast must have consisted of rum.

BONES.—Dat was only for medicine; but I didn't touch none ob it. Aside.—Took a privwate keg o' Bourbon 'long wid me.

INT.—But how did you procure your refreshments?

BONES.—Why, we all clubbed togedder—didn't hab a cent amongst us, nudder.

INT.—How could you club together, then?

BONES.—O, easy 'nough. We got a lot of cudgels and went in for a raid on de ole Dutch grocery on de corner; and if dat ain't clubbin' togedder, I'd like to know what am?

INT.—Then I suppose you obtained your boat upon the same principle?

BONES.—No; we hire dat on time, widout sayin' nuffin' to de owner. Den we 'gage Pete Simmins for de treasurer, and he made off wid de funds, and I made after him, and dere was a regular rough-and-tumble fight, but Pete got the fust knock down. Yah! yah!

INT.—He must have thought you a set of whole souled fellers.

BONES.—O, we was all sold, for dat matter, but we got Pete arrested, and it wasn't long before he saw de sell—de nation bonus sell, I mean. When we got ashore, we all went for de baskets—

INT.—The juga, you should say.

BONES.—Good many of us got jugged, like Pete, 'fore de day was ober. And I wanted to hire a kipple o' hosses and challenge Lew Dimmick to ride me a race for five dollars a side; and what you tink de dam feller said?

INT.—I really can't tell, sir.

BONES.—Said he nebber knew me to straddle anything but a bet; meanin', I 'spose, dat I wasn't a champion horseman. Well, I t'ought den I'd go somethin' better, and I let on: "Look h'yer, say, arter we'd gone a little ways; "dere's a wild rabbit." I dred and hit it de fust shot; what you think it turned out to be?

INT.—Not the slightest idea, sir.

BONES.—Blest if warn't a little piccaninny of a pig!

INT.—The farmers all turned out after you, I suppose.

BONES.—Yes; chased us 'bout a mile wid dere shot guns. Dey may talk 'bout bein' a nigger's heel, but I'll be dog on de chase, but I couldn't see it. We got off by wadin' troo a puddle. When we got back, de boys dey all begin to chaff us, and one of dem offer to shoot anybody one hundred yards distance for twenty-five dollars, but I wouldn't go into any such murdrin' blunder. Wid dat dey all laff.

INT.—But about that fete champetre?

BONES.—Well, de fac' ob de matter is, we all fell asleep 'bout dat time, from de 'fex ob de heat an' de whiskey, and dat finish de 'skurshin.

INT.—Horace Greeley will now sing:—

To Friends of Old.

Friends of yore's a fond adieu!
Dim grow the hills we hold so dear,
And years may pass 'ere we renew
The pledge that bound us faithful here.
The old hearth for us yet has ties,
For young and old still gather there—
The maiden with her radiant eyes,
And stooping age with silvery hair.
Chorus.—Friends of old, we drink to them,
In wine cups flowing to the brim,
And while we chant a parting hymn,
Toss to the winds all grief and care!

As, blest with staunch and gallant crew,
Our good ship ploughs the raging main,
A prayer goes up from hearts all true
That we may meet at home again,
May the old altar, as of yore,
Flash bright against the household fires,
Merrier, brighter than before,
To the eyes of sons and sires!
Chorus.—Friends of old, etc.

Blest fore'er be that fair land
Where the gods and graces reign!
And the voice of joy and love
Supplies the charm that lightens pain;
And the blythsome chorus rise
As once at the beaker flows,
And thus against the grace'ful brim
Each bubble like a diamond glows.
Chorus.—Friends of old, etc.

"ARE WE FORGOTTEN SO SOON WHEN WE'RE GONE?"

Dedicated to Joseph Jefferson.
BY CLAUDE DE HAVEN.

Have we a place no longer in your hearts,
Since the dark river of death we have crossed?
Will not the unbidden tears sometimes start,
As you recall us the loved and the lost?
Here in our prison of silence and gloom,
Still we number our life's sunny noon;
When you have laid us to rest in the tomb
Are we forgotten, forgotten so soon?
Chorus—When the grave receives its trust,
Earth to earth and dust to dust,
Are we at once from your memory torn,
"Are we forgotten so soon when we're gone?"

Think how we cherished and loved you on earth,
Watched o'er your footsteps with tenderest care,
Wept in your sorrow, rejoiced in your mirth,
Welcome no pleasure that you did not share.
Give us again our lost place in your heart,
Keep the sweet chords of affection in tune;
When for the realms of shadows we part,
Are we forgotten, forgotten so soon?
Chorus—When the last fond tie is broken,
When the last farewell is spoken,
Are we at once from your memory torn,
"Are we forgotten so soon when we're gone?"

"WITH KITTY PICKING BERRIES."

BY FRANK C. FILLERS.

The morning sun shone bright and warm in the golden autumn weather,
When, with our baskets on our arms, we wandered forth together;
The air was full of music sweet of mocking birds and threshes,
The dew was glistening at our feet and on the berry bushes.
Chorus.—Her eyes they were divinely blue, her lips like two ripe cherries—
On golden wings the moments flew with Kitty picking berries.

We sit beneath the chestnut tree among the crimson clover—
She said she loved no one but me, her darling and her lover;
Then lightly o'er the field she trips, her motions like a fairy's—
I stole the cherries from her lips while we were picking berries.
Chorus.—Her eyes they were, &c.

Like little mice, her pretty feet stole out beneath her kirtle,
Above her curls a chaplet sweet of woodbine, rose and myrtle;
The fragrant honeysuckle buds were opening sweet and pretty,
But the sweetest flower in the woods was Kitty picking berries.
Chorus.—Her eyes they were, &c.

RAYMOND AND HERR DRIESBACH'S MENAGERIES IN 1851.

From Dr. A. A. Mann, of Skowhegan, Me., we have received the annexed memento of a menagerie show given at that place in 1851.

RAYMOND & CO., AND HERR DRIESBACH'S MENAGERIES, united in one large and varied exhibition, consisting of all the rare animals now extant. Numbering over 100 specimens!

Open at 1 o'clock, P. M. Admission 25 cents; Children under 10 years, 12½ cents.

Among this great collection, which is the largest ever exhibited in America, is

THE RHINOCEROS; OR, THE UNICORN OF HOLY WRIT, the first and only one in America since 1826. The great difficulty in capturing this huge and savage creature, together with the almost impossibility of keeping him alive in a climate so uncongenial to his habits and constitution, renders the exhibition of a living Rhinoceros the greatest curiosity in the animal world; also specimen of the

HIPPOPOTAMUS,
the only one ever exhibited in America.

TWELVE LIONS,
of the finest specimens from different countries, some of which were presented to the renowned Herr Driesbach, by her majesty, Queen Victoria, in his recent tour through Europe.

THE MONSTER ELEPHANT, COLUMBUS,
the largest in America, weighing 10,750 pounds; also the BEAUTIFUL ELEPHANT TIPPOO SULTAN, which has caused such a great sensation all over Europe, will go through a variety of performances, such as waltzing, balancing, &c., the bell, creeping on his four fore legs, walking over his keeper, picking him up, drawing a cork from a bottle.

HERR DRIESBACH,
the most celebrated of all animal performers, will give an exhibition in

A DEN OF WILD ANIMALS.

His performances with the terrific group of Lions, Tigers, Cougars, Leopards, Panthers, etc., the same as performed by him in all the principal cities of Europe with such great renown.

HIDERAL'O, THE LION TAMER, will give a performance in a den of wild animals, separate, and altogether different from Herr Driesbach's, making two grand animal performances in the same exhibition.

Many other performances will be given in the course of the exhibition, such as ponies, monkeys, etc. B. J. HUNT, Agent.

NOTHING BUT A ROSE.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

It was nothing but a rose I gave her—
Nothing but a rose;
And whispered:—"To one queen I give another,
The prettiest one that grows."

It was at Long Branch at the August races,
Upon the second day;
She took it—pressed it to her lips of coral—
Then turned her head away.

It was nothing but a rose I gave her—
Nothing but a rose;
But, ah! her husband, who had seen me do it,
Gave me a bloody nose! J. H. B.

CUPID'S FOIBLES, FOLLIES AND FANCIES.

A FRAIL WIFE'S CONFESSION.
Her Reason for Preferring Another Man to Her Husband.

In last week's issue we published a paragraph giving the details of the murder of Jacob Goetzman by John Hensler, who afterwards committed suicide, at Rochester, N. Y., on July 31st. It appears that the green-eyed monster had taken possession of him, not altogether without reason, as the following more recent particulars, and Mrs. Henzler's confession, denote:—

Hensler was supposed to have left Rochester, as he had not been seen in some weeks, and must have planned the murder with great deliberation. The weapon with which he did the fatal shooting may have been, and probably was purchased for the occasion. He hung about the vicinity of the tragedy and seen Goetzman enter. This was not the latter's first visit, and the murderer was probably close upon his victim when he fired in the passage way or near the door leading from it to the kitchen. The wounded man appears to have retreated through the hall, and had strength enough left to shut the door at his end and bolt it. A small pool of blood was found on the carpet beside this door, which fell while he was endeavoring to save himself from further attack by closing the only passage to the sitting room. After slipping the bolt he walked but a step when he fell and was found as described. We may add, as a singular fact, that no one in the neighborhood, not even the persons living in the rooms above, heard either of the shots. Some weeks previously Detective Hughes was called into this place. Hensler and his wife were quarreling, and each charged the other with adultery. It was the recollection of this circumstance which aided the officer in the investigations. Mrs. Henzler was, by order of Chief Herrman, taken into custody and removed to the cells. The unfortunate woman is about five feet six inches high, light hair, complexion fair and smooth, features well formed, general expression intelligent, and her appearance somewhat attractive. She wore a merino dress of dark red color, the waist of which was partially unbuttoned, exposing neat, clean, and well made underskirts. She felt deeply the seriousness of the tragedy which had occurred, expressing several times her great sorrow for the family of Goetzman.

HER CONFESSION.

My maiden name is Catharine Trebert, and I am 30 years of age. About three years ago I married John Hesler, in Sanborn, Niagara County. We removed to this city after our marriage. My husband was a miller by trade. I worked hard for him, and he took the money, spent it, and got drunk. During the first two years of married life we quarreled a good deal. He was jealous. I accused him of going with other women and paying them money. He confessed to me that he had done so. He would not stop acting so, and we quarreled over it. He went away to the old country last year, and was gone nine weeks. When he returned we moved in to Abram Wienburg's Block, on Main street. I hired a floor and took in washing. I worked for many of the first families in the city, and earned in this way fifteen dollars a week. I had at one time $900, and my husband, when he went away from me, took $700 with him. I have $200 left and the furniture in the house is mine. When I found my husband continued to do wrong I did not care any longer about myself, and I said I would do just as he was doing. I did not do anything wrong for money; if I was a mean woman I would not wash and iron for a living. About three months ago my husband got a divorce and I got one also. We separated, but he would come to my home and scold and abuse me. Seven or eight weeks ago he left the city. I did not see anything of him in that time, and did not know where he was. Men have come to my house after their clothes. Goetzman was a friend of my husband's; they went to school together in the old country. He came to my house the first time about two weeks ago; we had at that time illicit intercourse. He visited me last night about half-past eight o'clock. He was with me about two hours. We had intercourse again last night. A light was burning in the sitting room, and when he was going away I told him that I would go into the kitchen and light the gas, so that he might go out the back door into Division street. He followed me along the hallway, and when I had lighted the match and was walking towards the gas-burner, I heard a noise which made me look around, and I heard a man say:—"G—d d—n." The next thing I heard was the pistol shot. I ran out the back door and down Division street and St. Paul, where I met some men and told them I wanted a policeman to go to my rooms. Mr. Goetzman was standing near the rear door to the hall when the pistol shot was fired.

Mrs. Hesler said that during the early part of the evening she heard some noise in the cellar, but she did not give any attention to it, supposing it to be a cat. She said Goetzman had a wife and three children, the youngest being only three weeks old. She had not seen her husband for eight weeks, and did not think he was in the city. She knew his voice the very moment he spoke. This woman acknowledges freely her criminal conduct, and the cause she offers is the manner in which her husband has acted towards her. She has had to support herself nearly all the time since they have been married. She claims to be a hard working, industrious woman, and the number of garments in the way of skirts, shirts, etc., which was spread around the kitchen tables which she was apparently engaged in washing, corroborated her statement in this particular. Other tenants in the block state that there has been more or less gossip about her misconduct. Her whole statement goes to show that her husband was jealous of her since they have been married, and that she has wandered from the paths of virtue because he first proved unfaithful to her.

THE ACE AND THE QUEEN.
A Pack of Cards in a Murder Trial.

A somewhat singular trial for murder has just taken place at Amiens, France. A farmer named Montreuil, three miles from Amiens, there lived a farmer named Mariot de Beauvoisin. He was married, but had no children. He was about sixty-five years of age and his wife fifty-five. He had a farm servant named Chauche, who had his meals in the house but did not sleep there. Chauche had been treated with great kindness by his employer, and was well acquainted with the ways of the house. One morning in April Chauche went to his work, as usual, at six in the morning, but was not admitted admittance; he returned to the public house where he was in the habit of sleeping. At seven o'clock he returned to the farm house, but was unable to obtain admittance. He procured a ladder and a stick, and with a stick he pushed back the bolt which fastened the gate of entry to the farm yard. He placed the ladder against the wall, and ascending it, cried out, before he had time to look into the bedroom: "My God, my master and mistress are brutally murdered." The village was soon alarmed and an examination of the premises was made. The throats of the old man and his wife were cut from ear to ear. A vigilant watch dog was found killed in the kitchen. In a back room a board had been removed, underneath which De Beauvoisin had hid his savings on the approach of the Germans during the war. He had informed a cousin of his that he had hid a considerable amount of money underneath the flooring. In the bedroom was discovered two cards, the ace of spades and the queen of hearts. Chauche's rooms were searched at the cabaret, and a pack of cards, or rather forty-nine cards of a pack were discovered. This left one card missing, but it was subsequently found between the farm house and the cabaret. The aunt of Chauche was visited, who, believing in the absolute innocence of her nephew, frankly stated that she had made him a present of a pack of cards. Chauche's wife had a paramour named Guillaume Boitel, who stated that Chauche had thrown a razor and a blood stained hammer into a pond adjoining the house. It was drained and the hammer and razor were found. Boitel was arrested, but swore, and his evidence was supported by two witnesses—his father and mother—that he had not been out of the house since the previous evening. Thereupon he was released, but having an idea that once released he would be arrested again, he very coolly confessed to some of his drinking friends, when half intoxicated, that he was not in the house as he had sworn, but that he had been present when Chauche committed the murder. When he was arrested the second time he became greatly alarmed, but persistently adhered to his last story. The evidence against Chauche appeared overwhelming. There was the pack of cards that it was proved had belonged to Chauche, two of which were found in the bedroom of the murdered man and his wife; there were the blood stained hammer and razor that Boitel and Chauche's wife had informed the police they saw Chauche throw into the pond; his knowledge of where the hoard was kept, and his premature cry of horror at the sight of the mutilated bodies. It was ascertained by placing the ladder in the same position in which he had placed it, that it was impossible he could have seen both bodies as he stated he could. But the charges by a fairly plausible and perfectly consistent story. Boitel, his wife's lover, knew through her as much as the husband did about the treasure, and nothing was more natural than that Boitel, being constantly at the house, should have had some of Chauche's cards in his pocket. His counsel maintained that his wife and her paramour were in a conspiracy to crush the husband. During the progress of the trial, Boitel's house was searched, and some old gold coins that had been shown to some of the inhabitants of the village by M. de Beauvoisin, were found in a small box that was carefully concealed. It was admitted that Chauche knew what Boitel had done; that he was cognizant of all the facts. The strong point that the counsel for the prosecution made against Chauche, was his raising the cry of murder before it was possible for him to have seen the bodies. But as he knew of the murder, it was contended it was not an unnatural illusion of an excited and alarmed imagination. Boitel's voluntary confession (when he believed himself safe) that her was acquainted with all the facts relating to the murder, materially strengthened the case for the defense. Chauche was acquitted and Boitel will shortly have to undergo his trial. The case has created the most intense excitement, and it is believed that Boitel committed the murder for the sake of plunder, and that Boitel and his paramour entered into a conspiracy to have Chauche executed.

A WOMAN IN THE CASE.

We published in our past issue an account of a mysterious assault, in Boston, Mass., upon George M. Hayden, comedian. We now glean from the Boston Times another version of the affair, which throws a little more light upon it. It appears that last winter Mr. Hayden, who was then doing business as a costumer in Montgomery place, visited a fancy dress ball at the Music Hall, and during the evening was attracted by a young lady attired as a peasant girl, and between them a flirtation was commenced, which resulted in the lady accepting an invitation to supper. He learned that her "front" name was Georgie, the feminine of his own, and, moreover, that she was the wife of a gentleman connected with a prominent Boston paper. Still that fact deterred neither of them from keeping a future secret appointment, of which the husband became informed. The latter became suspicious of his wife's conduct, and, obtaining a conge from his evening's labors, strolled through —— street, where, happening to cast his eyes aloft, he beheld upon the window curtain, thrown out by the gaslight in bold relief, the shadows of a man and woman indulging in a labial embrace. He recognized the woman to be his wife, still did not act hastily, but waited until the gentleman came out, when he followed, overtook him and asked:—"Is your name Hayward?" to which the reply came, "No, sir, my name is Hayden." On returning to his residence he found his wife waiting to receive him. A domestic storm ensued, and the wife faithfully promised never to see Hayden again. The matter blew over, and the husband, in the absence of any positive evidence of criminality, accepted her promises in good faith, and matters so rested until the latter part of July, when the husband accidentally discovered several letters of the spiciest description which had been written to his wife by the gushing comedian, who was then traveling with a dramatic company in the neighboring towns. Another scene occurred between the husband and wife, which resulted in their separation, which continued until within a few days of the reported assault, when, through the intervention of relatives, they were once more brought together. The wife vowed by all that was good and great that she would never, under any circumstances, see the costuming comedian again. The husband partially trusted to her promises, and everything was apparently serene until the evening of July 29th, when he started, accompanied by his wife, for the newspaper office where he was employed. At the door they parted, she to return home, as she said, and he to seek his labor. He, suddenly, however, changed his mind and followed his wife, who went to No. — Pleasant street, rang the bell and was admitted. Some few minutes afterwards a man approached, rang the bell and was likewise admitted. This was about half past eight o'clock, and for two hours thereafter did the husband keep watch. Presently the door opened and the destroyer of his peace, who was none other than George E. Hayden, emerged. He had proceeded but a few steps when he was confronted by the wronged husband, who approached, not from an alley-way as was stated, but in the middle of the sidewalk, and under the glare of a gaslight. Not a word was spoken; the deceived husband sprang upon the man who had wronged him, although the latter was physically his superior, and administered a terrible beating, as already reported. Although Hayden's friends, who are not conversant with the facts, are said to be urging him to prosecute the husband, he has, thus far, manifested a great willingness to have the whole affair kept as quiet as possible.

THE RING.

THE RECENT FATAL FIGHT IN ENGLAND.

At the Summer Assizes, Maidstone, Kent, Eng., on July 23d, before Baron Bramwell, John Connor, Dennis Harrington, Jack Hicks and Michael Davis surrendered to their bail, and pleaded not guilty to an indictment charging Connor with the manslaughter of Tom Callis, at Jarsford, on March 15th, and the others with aiding and abetting him. The Hon. George Denman and Mr. J. C. Matthews conducted the case for the crown, and Mr. Ribton defended the prisoners. In opening the case to the jury, Mr. Denman said:—On the 14th of last March all the prisoners met to carry out a prize fight at a place called Horley, in Surrey. All the prisoners were together on this occasion, and began the fight, but were interrupted, and had to go back to London without having accomplished their object. On this occasion the deceased does not appear to have received much punishment. The next day, the 15th, all the parties went to Long Reach, a place on the Kent side of the Thames, opposite to Purfleet. The police saw Connor and the deceased fighting, and on coming up to them the man Hicks asked Inspector Varley if they might finish the fight, and on the police saying "No" the fight was discontinued. The deceased man, Callis, at this time had a very severe blow over the eye, or somewhere on his head, and about ten minutes after he left the ring he fell down insensible, and was taken to the work-house at Dartford, where he died on the evening of the next day, and the post mortem proved that death had resulted from the pressure of a clot of blood on the brain, caused by

THE TURF.

SPORTS OF THE TURF AT LONG BRANCH.
The Monmouth Park Races.
SECOND DAY, TUESDAY, AUG. 6TH.

TOM BOWLING WINS THE TEMPLAN STAKES; MIDDAY THE LONG BRANCH STAKES; ALBUERA THE SELLING RACE; SUSAN ANN THE SCHELL CUP.

The weather on Tuesday, the 6th inst., the second day of the Monmouth Park second summer meeting, was gloomy and threatening in the forenoon, and the attendance, in consequence, although not so large as it otherwise would have been, though good, was not so large as on Monday, the theatrical racing many of the lady visitors at Long Branch being prevented by the portending storm from being present. Fortunately, the rain kept off, with the exception of a slight sprinkling when it fell just before the races commenced, and which had a good effect in laying the dust and improving the going. The track was in splendid condition, evincing the care and attention bestowed on it by the ex-citizen, evincing the care and attention bestowed on it by the energetic secretary and clerk of the course, Mr. W. R. Hunter, and the expectations of fleet time entertained by the spectators were fully realized, the time in the two year old race being the fastest ever made at the distance by horses of that age. The same puncture in the running of trains by the New Jersey Railroad was observed as on the first day.

Four races were on the day's programme, including a mile heat race, three in five, which, however, proved the least interesting event of the day, from its one sided character. The Templan Stakes, for two year olds—so named because of the numerous Stakes, for two year olds—so named because of the numerous distinguished members of the dramatic profession who reside at Long Branch in the summer season—was a highly exciting race, five of the twenty-three horses entered sporting silk on the occasion. These were Mr. Belmont's Medora, who had won the July Stakes at the previous meeting; Mr. McGrath's Tom Bowling, who had run second to her on that occasion, and ought to have won had not his rider made too much use of him, and Fairview, "pumped him out" before reaching the winning post, an l who ly "pumped him out" before reaching the winning post, an l who ly subsequently won the Flash Stakes at Saratoga; Zeb. Ward's Asteroid colt; Leonard Jerome's Lexington colt, and W. J. Macon's Dolorosa. The backers of Tom Bowling were pale with anxiety as they saw him display fractiousness at the post and delay the start for a considerable time. The horse had been severely kicked by Cora Linn at Saratoga at the starting post, hence his present unwillingness to join his horses; but at last, after having had blisters put on him, he was induced to start. When he did so he went like a streak of lightning, for before they had run fifty yards he was three or four lengths in front, and, retaining a commanding lead throughout, won with the greatest ease, making the fastest time on record for a two year old at the distance. Tom Bowling is a handsome bay colt, about 15¾ hands high, with two white heels and a slight blaze. He was bred by his owner, Mr. McGrath, and is by Lexington, out of Lucy Fowler, by Aiblon, and is, consequently, full brother to Richard B. Connolly. He is engaged in all the principal three year old stakes next year, and if he winners well, will doubtless distinguish himself next season.

THE SELLING RACE proved a genuine surprise for the racing man, for it was won by a complete outsider, Mr. H. C. Dawson's Albuera, who thus upset two great "pots" on Sanford and Henrietta, both of whom were backed for piles of money. So little was the winner's chances estimated that she sold in one pool of $300 for $5, and just before the race, coupled with two others, she only brought $70 in a pool of $575. She was admirably ridden by Jimmy Rice, the light weight jockey of Col. McDaniels' stable, and to his fine riding the mare's victory is attributable. She made the running throughout, was never headed, and won cleverly by a length in 2:43¾. Albuera is by Jeff Davis, out of Ninette, the dam of Midday, and, alike the latter, was bred by Mr. Dawson. Although she has run repeatedly the last two years, this was her first victory; her owner, unfortunately, did not profit much by her winning, as he only had one small pool on the race, the mare having so often deceived him before that he dared not trust her on this occasion.

THE LONG BRANCH STAKES, two miles, brought out Preakness, Alroy, Midday and Winsoup, the latter being started to make the running for her stable companion, Midday. Preakness was the favorite over the field, but he sadly disappointed his friends, for, after a very slowly run race, which just suited Midday, the latter beat him on the post by a head. The pace was wretched throughout the first mile, and the orders given to Donahue to wait with Preakness to the last quarter of a mile, lost the race, for with a mare of Midday's tremendous speed, it was the height of impolicy to put the issue of the race on a brush at the finish. Midday is by Imported Hellive, out of Minette, and her breeder, Mr. Dawson, sold her and her dam to Mr. Doswell when a suckling. She has won six out of seven races this year, and at Saratoga she changed hands, Major Doswell selling her to Mr. S. Bens, a gentleman who purchasing Winesap of Mr. Doswell, for $1,000, and a contingency of $500 additional if she beats Defender in the Summer Handicap at Saratoga.

THE SCHELL CUP—a silver punchbowl, value, $500—the gift of the Hon. Richard Schell, was a handicap race of mile heats, best three in five, but only two out of the nine entered accepted the weights; a fact which does not reflect much credit on the skill and impartiality of the two handicappers. The two left in were Susan Ann and Brennus, owned by Messrs. H. P. McGrath and John Chamberlin, and as these gentlemen are connected in business, it was thought best that no pools should be sold, for it might give rise to the opinion that the race was "made to order." Both gentlemen were anxious to win it; Mr. McGrath wanting it for his sideboard at McGrathiana—his splendid residence near Lexington—while Mr. Chamberlin declared that he would give $1,000 to win it, and would then give it for another race. Susan Ann had no difficulty in winning in three straight heats; Bobby Swim, in the first, indulging in a display of speed that, while it made Fordham, for he allowed Hughes on Brennus to lead until within a few strides of the stand, when he came with a rush and won on the post, in both heats.

THE THESPIAN STAKES,

for two-year olds, $50 each, play or pay, with $500 added by the association, three-quarters of a mile, had five runners out of the twenty-three entered—Medora, Tom Bowling, Dolorosa, brown colt by Asteroid out of Fairy, and bay colt by Lexington out of Kitty Clark. This was a heavy betting race, pools selling as follows:—

Medora	$100	$150	$150	$150	$160	$245	$310
Tom Bowling	90	135	135	140	200	335
Asteroid	55	115	100	85	155	160
Jerome's b c	40	80	75	35	65	45
The field	35	30	30	30	60	40

Tom Bowling showed a deal of temper at the post, obstinately refusing to join his horses so as to start together. At last, after a delay of half an hour, the flag fell to a capital send off; Medora showing in front, Tom Bowling second, Ward's colt third, and Jerome's fourth, both last named throughout the race. Before they had run fifty yards, Tom Bowling rushed to the front, and cut out the running at a tremendous pace. On the back-stretch Ward's asteroid colt passed Medora, and went in hot pursuit of Tom Bowling, who was three lengths ahead at the half-mile pole. On the lower stretch he began to show temper again, and his rider had to give him the spurs to keep him going straight. At the head of the stretch he was so far in front that it was clear that he could never catch him, for he came along at such a clinking pace that he increased his lead at every stride, and won by four lengths in 1:16¾, the fastest two-year old time, at the distance, on the Ward's colt was second, three lengths before Medora, who was as far before Dolorosa. Summary:—

MONMOUTH PARK COURSE, Aug. 6th.—FIRST RACE.—Thespian Stakes, value $500, added to a sweepstakes of $50 each, play or pay, for two year olds; to second to receive $100 and the third $50 out of the stakes; three-quarters of a mile.

THE SELLING RACE,

for a purse of $500, for all ages, had seven entries. In the pools Sanford was first choice, selling for $300; Henrietta, $195; King Henry, $100; Impecunious, $50, and the field $30. Albuera made the running, followed by King Henry, Impecunious, Sanford, Gerald and Henrietta, in the order named. As they passed the stand the first time Albuera was leading a length, King Henry second, Henrietta third and Sanford fourth, the rest strung out behind. Gerald ran through his horses and took third place on the club house turn, but Albuera was still led, but Sanford and Henrietta were close after her, the latter looking very dangerous as they turned into the stretch, but she died away suddenly. Sanford made a determined effort to reach Albuera as they came down the home stretch, but failed, and the deepest outsider won cleverly by a length in 2:43¾, Sanford second, King Henry third and Henrietta fourth. Summary:—

THE LONG BRANCH STAKES

of $50 each, p.p., with $800 added, to carry 100lbs, two miles, had four runners out of the sixteen entries. The pool betting was as under:—

Preakness	$430	$420	$400	$700	$700	$620
Dowell	355	400	400	405	450	320
Alroy	80	170	125	160	115	50

Winesap cut out the running, attended by Alroy for the first mile, Midday waiting, and Preakness behind. At the end of the second mile the pace improved, the first having been run in 1:58½. Preakness and Midday closed up on the back-stretch, and at the half mile Winesap was three lengths ahead of Alroy, who led Preakness two lengths, with Midday as far behind the latter. Winesap retired at the three-quarter pole, and as they entered the home-stretch, Preakness and Midday joined issue; the race being reduced to a match between them. A fine race home resulted in favor of Midday by a head; Winesap six lengths off. Time, 3:45¾, a very slowly run race, with 100lbs up. Summary:—

SAME DAY.—The Long Branch Stakes, value $800, added to a sweepstakes of $50 each, play or pay, for all ages; to carry 100 lbs.; mares and geldings allowed 3 lbs.; the second to receive $300, and the third $100 out of the stakes; two miles.

SAME DAY.—The Schell Cup, a silver punch bowl, value $500, given by Richard Schell; a handicap for all ages, mile heats, best three in five.

THIRD DAY, WEDNESDAY, AUG. 7.

NEVADA WINS THE WEST END HOTEL STAKES; ALROY THE MILE HEAT RACE; AND SUSAN ANN THE HOST STAKES.

The weather continued fine and cool and the attendance good on Wednesday, the third day of the meeting. The West End Hotel stakes, for three year old fillies, the winner to be sold for a full sister to Salina, belonging to Mr. A. C. Franklin, an old Tennessee turfman, who fairly galloped away from her two opponents. Extract and Nevada. The former is a powerful racing-like bay filly, about 15¾ hands in height, with three white feet, and small star in forehead. She was bred by Mr. Alexander, of Woodburn, Ky., and is by Lexington out of Lightsome, the daughter of Glencoe and Lavity. Mr. Franklin purchased her at the annual sale of Mr. Alexander's yearlings in 1870 for $380, and this was her maiden race. Her free, easy action, when extended, and the commanding style in which she cut down her opponents as soon as called upon, favorably impressed experienced turfmen, and their opinion is that she is bound to distinguish herself equally with her famous sister, Salina. The latter, we may mention, has taken her leave of the turf, for after her return from New Orleans this spring, and while being prepared for her two engagements at the Jerome Park, she was attacked by that mysterious disease, spinal meningitis, and although she recovered, Mr. Bancroft thought it would be useless to train her again, so prorrated was she, and he sent her to his stud farm in Kentucky to become a brood mare. Nevada is engaged in a three year old stake, two miles, at Saratoga, in which she will have to carry a 5 lb. penalty.

The second race, mile heats, again fell to the same Tennessee stable, Mr. Franklin following up his success by winning it with Arizona, a full sister to Cape Race, being by Lexington out of Imp. Zone by The Cure. She won the first heat easily in 1:45¾, laid up in the next heat, which Express won in 1:45¾, and then beat him single handed (all the others having been sent to the stables) in the third heat, very handily in 1:50¾. This double victory compensated the stable for the defeat of Arizona by Lonerfellow and Susan Ann, in the mile heat race at the previous meeting. Theodore Allocet, who was formerly Capt. Moore's first lieutenant, is now the trainer of Mr. Franklin's stable, and the high order in which he brought both winners to the post speaks highly for his skill and attention as a trainer.

The defeat of Preakness in the Host Stakes, a dash of three miles, by Susan Ann, was the surprise of the day. He was so strongly fancied that his sanguine admirers did not hesitate to lay two to one on his beating his two opponents—Alroy and Susan Ann, especially as Heyward had sent a telegram to Jerry, and arrived specially to ride him. But the "Squire of McGrathiana" was equally confident of winning with Susan Ann, and backed her pluckily, as did also Mr. John Chamberlin, the latter having her in nearly every pool sold.

How Susan Ann won is clearly described; and it is only necessary to say that Preakness was finally beaten after going two miles, and it was only the fine riding of his jockey that prevented him from being thoroughly unceremoniously "pulled off," for he carried him along the last mile by main strength. Susan Ann proved herself a much better mare than the public had given her credit for, the galloped house an easy winner in 5:33¾, which she could easily have reduced two or three seconds. Norfolk, in California, in his march against Lodi, ran the first heat, three miles, in 5:27¾; but he was carrying only 10 lbs. or 14 lbs. less than Susan Ann, who, however, was a year older. The winner, like Tom Bowling, was bred by McGrath, and is by Lexington out of Jury (the dam of Rhyndeline) by imp. Chesterfield. She won the Schell Cup at this meeting, and at the previous one, in the mile heat race, defeated Longfellow in the second heat, compelling him, in the third heat, to run in 1:43¾ to beat her. She will retire after this season's campaign, from the turf, and will be bred either to Longfellow or to Kingston.

THE WEST END HOTEL STAKES,

for three year old fillies, $50 each, play or pay, worth $1,800, one mile and three quarters; the winner of the Monmouth Oaks to carry 5lbs. extra, had twenty-three entries, of which three only came to the post. These were John Harper's chestnut filly Extract, by Endorser, dam Nantura; H. P. McGrath's bay filly Jury, by Lexington, dam Rosana, and A. C. Franklin's bay filly Nevada, sister to Salina. Nevada was made a hot favorite on the strength of her racing-like looks and the high private reputation she had. She sold in pools for $200, Extract, $100, and Jury, $60. Jury made the running at a slow pace for half a mile, when Extract took it on and led past the stand, six lengths ahead of Jury and Nevada, who were running abreast. Extract kept her lead until entering the home-stretch, when Nevada cut loose, and, cutting down her rivals in a few strides, galloped home the easiest of winners by two lengths; Jury beating Extract for second money by six lengths. Time, 3:39¾. Summary:—

MONMOUTH PARK, Aug. 7th.—The West End Hotel Stakes, a renewal of the Monmouth Oaks Stakes, value $1,800, added to a sweepstakes of $50 each, play or pay, for fillies, foals of 1869; the winner of the Monmouth Oaks Stakes to carry five pounds extra; the second to receive $300, and the third $100 out of the stakes; one and three quarter miles.

THE SECOND RACE,

for a purse of $700, mile heats, for horses of all ages that had not won at either meeting; the winner taking $400; the second, $100, and the third horse, $20. The entries were Arizona, Express, Lord Byron, Gerald and Commerce. Pools sold as follows before each heat:—

Express	$250	$230	$240	$430	$410	$410
Arizona	270	240	240	230	230	170
Lord Byron	40	35	40	130	165	120
Commerce	25	30	30	30	60	35

AFTER SECOND HEAT.

Arizona	$300	$400	$400	$430	$400
Express	240	345	270	300	280

First Heat.—Commerce and Lord Byron were away first, Express third and the favorite last. On the back-stretch, Express, Lord Byron and Commerce were running abreast, with Gerald fourth and Arizona still bringing up the rear. Express went in front along the lower stretch, but on entering the home-stretch, the race was reduced to a match between Express and Arizona, the pair running lapped to within twenty lengths of the string, when the mare quitted him and won cleverly by a length in 1:46¾; Gerald third, and the others unplaced.

Second Heat.—Arizona was first off, but at the turn Lord Byron and Gerald closed on her, and ran lapped along the back-stretch. Nearing the half mile pole, Express rushed to the front, and Arizona was pulled back into fourth place. Express retained his lead home, and won the heat by ten lengths; Arizona and Lord Byron second and third. Time, 1:46¾. Commerce was distanced.

Third Heat.—Only Arizona and Express, who had each won a heat, could now start for the deciding one. The pair ran yoked from the start to the half-mile pole, when Arizona began to forge steadily ahead, and leaving Express, came home an easy winner by five lengths in 1:50¾. Summary:—

for all ages, $50 entrance, play or pay, with $1,000 added, three miles, had six entries and three runners—Nevada, Alroy and Susan Ann. The betting on this race was heavy as the four subjoined pools show.

Preakness	$600	$510	$1,100	$1,300	$1,400
Susan Ann	430	400	800	780	780
Alroy	100	85	125	138	135

Preakness took up the running soon after the horses started, and as the horses ran along the back-stretch Alroy was yoked on him, with Susan Ann a length behind. As they came up the stretch and went under the string on the first mile, Alroy had his neck in front of Preakness, while the latter led Susan Ann two lengths. Going around the turn Bobby Swim took the mare to the front, and Alroy quitting her at the end, he was left to her and Preakness. Bets were loudly offered on the latter winning, but Susan Ann was quitting him at every stride, and led him five lengths as they entered the second mile. Hayward reduced this gap somewhat on the next half mile, but he could not do more with the applica ion of whip and spur, overhaul the mare, who, galloping as strong and fresh as when she started, beat him in a common canter by a dozen lengths, while Alroy was nearly a quarter of a mile behind. Time, 5:33¾. Summary:—

FOURTH DAY, THURSDAY, AUG. 8TH.

TOM BOWLING WINS THE AUGUST STAKES, METEOR THE ROBINS' STAKES AND ALBUERA THE SELLING RACE.

A finer day for racing could not have been desired, for the sun was bright and unclouded, while his fervid rays were agreeably tempered by a gentle breeze from the ocean. There was a good, but not large, attendance, for it was looked upon as an "off day," and the programme was not equal in attraction to those of the three previous days. Tom Bowling continued his meteoric career by winning the August Stakes, worth $1,450, in a style which spoke highly for him as a racer, for he had the race safely before he had gone a quarter of a mile, fairly running away from his horses, and spread-eagled them in a style seldom witnessed. He won, under a strong pull, by twenty lengths, in 1:47, and could easily have reduced the time a couple of seconds.

The Robins Stakes was won by Meteor, a son of Asteroid and Maria Junis, who carried off the Jersey Derby at the first meeting, beating Joe Daniels and several others. He was reported to be lame, but showed no symptoms of it in the race, which he won with great ease, Experience Oaks being second. In the Selling Race, Albuera and Gao, Mr. Dawson's entry, ran first and second in a field of six runners, and, although the winner had not a single bidder when put up at auction for her entered selling price, $600, Mr. Welch, of Philadelphia, purchased her by private contract for $1,000, to be delivered after the Baltimore meeting, when she will be bred to Leamington, the sire of Longfellow, Enquirer and Lyttleton.

THE AUGUST STAKES,

for two year olds, $50 each, p. p., with $800 added, one mile, had nineteen entries and three runners—Tom Bowling, Wizard and Dolorosa. The betting was $400 to $100 on Tom Bowling, who took the lead soon after starting, opened a wide gap before they had run a quarter of a mile, and won in a canter by fifty yards; Wizard, who swerved from distress as they came up the stretch, beating Dolorosa four lengths for second money. Time, 1:47. Value of the stake, $1,450. Summary:—

FOURTH DAY, Aug. 8th.—August Stakes, value $800, added to a sweepstakes of $50 each, play or pay, for two-year olds; the winner of the Thespian Stakes to carry five pounds extra; the second horse to receive $300 and the third $100 out of the stakes; one mile.

THE ROBINS STAKES,

for three year olds, $50 each, p. p., with $1,000 added, two miles, had five runners out of the twenty-nine entries, viz.:—Meteor, Experience Oaks, Boss Tweed, John Doe and Mildew. Meteor was the favorite, bringing $300 to Mildew's $40, Jury's $20, and Boss Tweed's $15. Experience Oaks cut out the running for nearly a quarter of a mile, with Meteor second, Mildew next, and John Doe last. On the back-stretch Meteor went to the front, and with Experience Oaksas second, carried on the running throughout, the former winning in a canter by four lengths, Experience Oaks beating John Doe two lengths for second place; Mildew beaten off. Time, 3:44¾. Summary:—

SAME DAY.—The Robins Stakes, value $1,000, added to a sweepstakes of $50 each, play or pay, for colts and fillies, foals of 1869; the second to receive $200 and the third $100 out of the stakes; two miles.

THE SELLING RACE

for a purse of $500, two miles, with allowances in weight according to entered selling price, had Albuera, Gao, Lord Byron, Sorrel Dan, Henrietta and Venetia entered. Mr. Dawson's entry, Albuera and Gao, sold as first choice, Sorrel Dan, Lord Byron and Venetia following in the order named, and they ran the first mile without change of position, in 1:50, except that Susan Ann passed Lyttleton on the home-stretch, and led him a length under the string. Kingfisher being ten lengths behind Milesian, and lightly pulling Gradwell out of the saddle. On the next quarter Milesian closed on Lyttleton, and Gradwell jumping off, his mount was run in 1:49, or 3:40 for the two miles, Susan Ann leading Milesian four lengths under the string, Milesian three lengths before Lyttleton, and Kingfisher a dozen lengths behind the latter. After passing the quarter pole, and running about a hundred yards along the back-stretch, Kingfisher was seen to swerve suddenly and falter, and Gradwell, jumping off his back, proclaimed the great horse had broken down in just the same place as he had given way last summer, when in training for his four mile race with Longfellow. He was led off the course, and thus ingloriously closed his racing career, which at three years old had been so brilliant. Susan Ann continued her lead throughout the third mile, which she finished in 5:43, two lengths before Milesian, who had Lyttleton on his flanks. On the turn Milesian went up and lapped Susan Ann, and the pair ran head and head to near the half mile pole, where Milesian showed half a length in front, Lyttleton being close up. On the lower stretch Susan Ann fell back, apparently beaten, but Bobby Swim, finding she was tiring, prudently took took a pull at her, and let the other go in front. A splendid struggle commenced as the horses entered the home-stretch, between Lyttleton and Milesian. One hundred yards from home the former showed in front and seemed to have the race safe, when Introductory Overture.

MONDAY, Aug. 12th, '72.

This is the day and date set down by the astronomer Plantamour for a collision between the earth and a comet, in which this terrestrial globe of our's, Mr. Plantamour affirmed, would get the worst of the encounter, while the comet would sail away triumphantly into the far off regions of etherial blue. This Plantamour, while delving and digging, and laboring in the cause of science, will have to plant a more agreeable vegetation if he expects to become popular with the masses, or maintain his reputation as an astronomer of the first water. His comet has not even made its appearance in the immensity of space, and though credulous persons are looking through bits of smoked glass for our adversary, and getting reserved seats on the Battery and up at the Central Park to obtain a good view of the "collusion," thus far their patience has not been rewarded by a sight of the threatened revolutionizer of the earth's equilibrium and so forth.....In the absence of any very great exhibition of theatrical wit, there was a brilliant display in the firmament on high last Thursday night, commencing at 9 o'clock P. M., and concluding at daylight on the following morning. It was a free show, open to all, and was witnessed by a highly appreciative though sleepy assemblage of spectators. The insinuation that our fire department turned out in force to put out the aurora borealis is a meaty slander on a noble band of men; and though they did turn out, and though steam was got up in the engines when the aurora was doing its prettiest and making a shining light on the midnight air, yet we have reason to know that the boys merely intended to welcome home the Holy Rollers from their chowder excursion, and not to extinguish the aurora. If people would stick to the truth, we should not complain; but when they get out of their depth, and vilify a useful class of citizens, our very soul revolts at the base indignity.....It isn't often that we want to be an angel or a girl, or anything like that, but when, last Saturday night, we "sot out the show" at Wallack's and gazed with unadulterated feelings of rapture when Lydia Thompson and the other women pranced round the stage with scarcely a stitch of visible toggery upon their beautiful forms, we admit that we did long to be one of them, they looked so cool and airy and transparent, while we and the other suffering men were starched and wound up in clothes and things like we were Egyptian mummies a thousand years old or more. Adam and Eve had the proper idea of dressing, and if it hadn't been for the jobbiness of that animated boa constrictor we all might be roaming about the streets, innocent as lambs and as naked as the day we were born. Just imagine how pleasant and cool it would be for us all, to say nothing of the absence of tailors and tailors' bills. We certainly envy Lydia her costume.....We wonder that some enterprising manager doesn't get up "Lady Godiva" this hot weather. Given with appropriate costume and a real Lady Godiva and live horse, this thing would pay like fun. It's a libel on womankind to say that no pretty behaved female could be induced to assume the character of Lady Godiva, for to the pure all things are pure, likewise honi soit qui mal y pense; the growing sisterhood of divine beauties would be only too willing to enact the part of one whose virtues were worthy the emulation of her sex. Nota Bene—It was while this nude lady was cavorting through the streets of Coventry that a disreputable man took advantage of the novelty of the scene and went out of his window in a surreptitious manner, although it was against the law so to do. What was the fate of this immoral creature? He was struck blind before he was half done looking at her lovely and unconstrained charms, and had to sell matches for a living ever after. New York, bad as she is in the estimation of our envious provincial towns, could never produce such a lurking devil as this beastly Peeping Tom of Coventry—perhaps.

A nude girl little thinks of brains,
Yet many a boon of critics begs—
Cortes, they need not take much pains—
She'll find her task is in her legs!

.....We are not surprised at anything the papers say now-a-days, but we must beg to offer our protest against the allegation that the French band which sailed on Saturday last have gone home to Limerick. On the most undoubted authority we positively declare that this French band is not one of the "Limerick races".....During the absence of Gen. Grant and Col. Greeley from the city last week Mr. and Mrs. Spotted Tail, Mr. Man-with-a-hole-in-his-head, and other big injuns, have been favoring the metropolis with their presence. These noble red men of the forest were so successful in their previous appearances in Gotham that a second mark to show was offerred them, which they did not feel at liberty to decline. Spotted Tail is tired of his old haunts, and is once more desirous of changing his spots!.....Charley White, a veteran in the ranks of minstrelsy and kindred amusements in this city, opens the Athenæum this evening, August 12th. Charley, according to the announcement of the company he has engaged, has gathered around him a regular klan party. We miss the little dears, however, that we have been accustomed to see fixed upon the habitues of every well-regulated place of amusement on Broadway. Don't be behind, neighbor White, in this little matter. Sandwich a few of the gentler sex in the well-bred aggregation you have mustered together.....We have no objection to organ players grinding out their melodies in the silent watches of the night, beneath our lattice; neither do we seriously object to the marvelous feats performed by educated monkeys; but we do most solemnly raise our voice against the use of old instruments and aged monkeys when new ones are to be so easily obtained. What we want is an organic change, in exchange for the organic change so liberally bestowed upon these peripatetic venders of cheap music.....We are to have some "powerful combinations of talent" in the city during the coming season, and the competition between managers promises to be unusually animated and sanguinary. Manager Daly, at the west end, presents a well-balanced array of people, embracing several stars of well-deserved fame and popularity. Sheridan Shook (no we won't do it; we were just about to originate a "new and novel" joke about this gentleman, but owing to the warmth of the weather, and the debilitated condition of our readers, we forbear) offers a gal-axy of attractions "too beautiful, too beautiful to last," as the divine poet insanely remarks; then Messrs. Colville and Hayes, not to be left out in the wide world alone, all alone, will show such a bevy of beauties as will make the Olympic a joy forever. If all works nicely. To this end, "the strength of each company" is returning home to go in harness once more, to take their accustomed places, and commence the labors of another season. In sympathy with the returned ones, we offer a few well-designed rhymes about the boys—

AFTER VACATION.

Says Buskin, turning with a yawn,
In bed at Long Branch t'other morn,
"This brief vacation's over,
For which the gracious Gods be prais'
I think my friends would be amazed
Who think I live in clover,
Or here have nothing now to do,
Some theBooks I've waded through,
Or used my pen in something new,
From Richard unto Rover.
A part of over forty length
May well exhaust an actor's strength,
And cause his mind to wander.
If this is what they term employment,
I wonder what they call employment,
Six weeks of ease, and over-worked,—
I'll back to town, by thunder!"

.....Mister Thomas Thumb will have to hide his undiminished head, it is thought, for about a mile an' a half from Milan, Tennessee, an industrious but honest couple have just turned out a person twenty-three years old, who weighs one pound to the inch, and the inches number forty-five. Ever since these industrial fairs have been in vogue, new things have been the order of the day, and everybody "out west" tries to outdo everybody else in the invention and construction of products of different kinds, and we are yet in our infancy as producers. What a nation we ought to be if Greeley becomes elected. We shall keep our eyes on Tennessee as well as upon Delaware.....We knew a man who goes to see every burlesque and burlesque troupe presented in this city, yet he complains of being unhappy and disgusted with life. We advised him to change his medicine and give up burlesque. You may not believe us, but it's true, nevertheless, that this man never laughs; even in the exhoranatiar of Lydia Thompson's didoes, he sits like a stone and is totally immovable. It is thought that tragedy will melt this dead heart and bring out all his humorous feelings. We asked the inability of the management to substitute other performances, he felt obliged to dismiss the audience," adding that a performance would be given on the following evening, and that tickets would be given or the money refunded to those present. A stampede for the doors ensued, and it was found that the door-keepers owing to the absence of the keys, could not get the tickets from the boxes. However, after considerable delay, they were obtained, and the return of tickets and their redemption at the box-office commenced. Confusion reigned supreme; the crowd jostled each other in every direction; the passers-by on the street, pausing to learn the cause of the commotion, formed a large crowd in front of the vestibule. Suddenly, a large number who had been pent up in the auditorium rushed out en masse, throwing down a number of persons standing on the sidewalk and running over their prostrate forms. Fortunately, however, no one was injured. The arrival of the police, who promptly cleared the vestibule of all who did not possess tickets, restored order; the money in the box-office was promptly returned, and the lights speedily extinguished. On the following evening Billy Pastor assumed the management, and the theatre was re-opened with a fair company, and Miss Leo Hudson as the stellar attraction. The attendance was fair, and the performances during the balance of the week were more satisfactory. The programmes were as follows:—Monday and Tuesday, "The French Spy" and "Andy Blake;" Wednesday and Thursday, "Lucrezia Borgia" and "The Wept of the Wish-ton-Wish;" Friday, for Miss Hudson's benefit. "Belphegor," "The Idiot Witness," an olio performance by Sam Devere, Blanche Selwyn, Ada Wray and others, and an assault at arms by Mickey Coburn and Johnny Saunders. Saturday, "Handsome Jack" and "Don Cæsar de Bazan." This evening, Aug. 12th, Farron and Baker are announced to commence an engagement, acting in the drama entitled "Chris and Lena." Tony Pastor, who is absent from the city, making a tour of the country with his variety company, has had nothing to do with the management of his theatre since July 1st, he having leased it to other parties, and consequently he should not, in any respect, be held accountable for what has occurred there.

WASHINGTON NORTON, Ethiopian comedian, aided by Harry Guyenette and the Misses Fannie and Julia Bland, commenced an engagement at the Bowery Theatre on Monday evening, Aug. 5th, acting that evening and throughout the week in a drama, in a prologue and four acts, entitled "From Broad St. to Wall." Mr. Guyenette is the author. The drama, even regarded as a vehicle for introducing the special performances of Mr. Norton, cannot be pronounced a success. It possesses neither novelty nor originality, and the introduced performances only hinder its action. Mr. Norton, who re-appeared after many years absence from his native land, was most enthusiastically welcomed. His banjo solos and songs and dances drew forth much genuine applause, and in them nearly all the comfortable chairs, the parquet or back portion containing 280, and the orchestra, the light iron railing divides the parquet and orchestra; on either side of the stage are two private boxes, seating four persons each, which are not enclosed, but are like Parisian loges; a neat and tasteful proscenium has been built, a new drop curtain painted, and in the centre of the proscenium border may be seen an excellent portrait of the manager, L. R. Wilson. Considerable new scenery has also been painted. The old entrance, which has been freshly papered, will be temporarily used, but negotiations are pending for a lease of a store on Broadway, which, if secured, will be converted into a wide and capacious entrance on the north side of the auditorium. New and elegant lanterns have been placed on Broadway, in front of the hall. The performances will consist of legitimate minstrelsy, of which Mr. White is one of the veterans, and an olio of miscellaneous acts and dramatic sketches. Popular prices of admission will be adhered to, as follows:—Orchestra, 75 cents; parquet, 50 cents; gallery, 25 cents, and private boxes, $4 each. The following is a list of the company and officers:—Mons. Langlois, John Stewart, Andy McKee and Stevie Rogers, Charles White, Charles Henry, Wash. Norton, Nelse Seymour, George Coes, Sergt. Burke, Carl Rudolph, J. K. Campbell, Charles Nichols, Jos. Lang, W. Scivinski, E. W. Prescott, E. Harding, Charles Storms, Prof. E. Cornu, Frank Beeler, C. W. Schwab, T. Deverel, W. B. Paston, F. Tortone, C. Schiebel and F. Vingiprova. Manager, Charles White; stage manager, George Coes; treasurer, R. H. Harvey; musical director, E. Cornu; scenic artist, R. L. Weed; machinist, P. Summers; superintendent of gas, W. O'Neil, and property man, E. Hurley.

EUGENIA O. JAMES is to give a reading at Association Hall, cor. 23d street and Fourth avenue, this evening, Aug. 12th.

F. S. CHANFRAU, by his masterly and artistic impersonation of Kit, in the drama entitled "Kit, the Arkansas Traveler," succeeded in filling the auditorium of Wood's Museum to repletion during the evening and Saturday matinee performances of the past week. In fact, upon several occasions a large number of persons were turned from the doors, unable to procure admission. The present engagement may be regarded as one of the most successful ever performed by Mr. Chanfran in this city or at that theatre. When a change of bill shall become necessary, "Sam" will be placed upon the boards. There is a wide chasm between the backwoods-man of the west and the enervated fop of society, yet the versatility of Mr. Chanfrau's great artistic ability bridges it o'er, and those who have seen him personate the one can scarcely believe the evidence of their own senses as they gaze upon the portrayal of the other. At the customary matinee performances the stock company performed "Broken Toys" and "Larkin's Love Letters."

IN CONSEQUENCE of engagements entered into prior to the production of "One Wife," the withdrawal of that drama was necessitated after the performances of Aug. 10th, when Miss Thompson's engagement terminated. This evening, Aug. 12th, the Lingard Comedy Company, a full list of the artists composing which may be found in the dramatic summary of the present issue, commence an engagement of three weeks' duration, acting in a new comedy, in three acts, entitled "A Life's Dream," which is to be produced with new scenery by Johnson, music by Sig. G. Operti, costumes by James McCreery & Co., and properties by D. Ryan. During the evening Mr. Lingard will appear in a selection from the following new character sketches, which have been written, composed and invented by him:—"The N. G. N. Y." "Five Times a Wife;" "Young Brother Jonathan;" "I Shouldn't Like to Say;" "Pleasures of the Opera," with imitations of the tenor, baritone, basso and prima donna; "I'm Little, but I'm Good;" "Italian Hurdy Gurdy Boy;" "I'm not a Gossip;" "A Drive to Jerome," and "Griffin, Whittin, Smithin, and Pimlin."

THE LADIES AND GENTLEMEN engaged for the coming season at the Fifth Avenue Theatre are requested, through a card elsewhere, to assemble in the green-room on Aug. 23d.

THE MOR BROTHERS, skaters, sailed for England on Aug. 10th, per the steamship Egypt.

C. A. MCMANUS, who arrived from St. John, N. B., during the past week, is engaged to travel with W. Horace Lingard's company the coming season.

MISS MILLIE BARKETT and Mr. Maurice Pike are engaged for the coming season at Booth's Theatre.

THE LYDIA THOMPSON BURLESQUE TROUPE continued to attract a large attendance at Wallack's during the past week by their excellent performances in "Robin Hood." Some few changes were made in the musical selections, among which "Little Fraud" and the topical rondo were rapturously encored. A matinee performance of "Robin Hood" was given on Saturday, Aug. 10th. This evening, Aug. 12th, the burlesque entitled "Blue Beard," which was successfully performed by this company at Niblo's Garden some time since, is to be revived.

MRS. JOHN WOOD arrived from England on Aug. 7th.

THE STADT THEATRE was to have been sold by auction on Aug. 8th, but an announcement was made that, in consequence of an injunction, the sale would be postponed until the 13th inst.

MRS. MACREADY is to commence a brief season at the Academy of Music, with her dramatic company, on Sept. 9th, at the close of which she will make a western tour.

J. S. SCHELL, scenic artist, has returned to the city from a summer tour in the mountains.

DAVE CARSON leaves the city on Aug. 15th for India, where, for some few years past, he has met with much success in the pursuit of his profession. He will be accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. John L. Hall, the well known comedians and burlesque artists, and the entertainment which he now proposes to give will consist of vocal and instrumental music, minstrelsy, and his own specialities. He will augment the company in London, Eng., with several of the best minstrel performers that can be secured. Mr. Carson has been very successful in imitating the dialect and idiosyncracies of the natives of India, and his performances have received the highest endorsement of the local press. We trust that success will crown his undertaking, and, judging from his past experience, we have no doubt that such will be the result.

MISS LEO HUDSON commenced an engagement at Tony Pastor's on Monday evening, Aug. 5th, but, owing to internal dissension among the company and the management, the performances during the week were of anything but a satisfactory nature. The attendance for some time past has been quite meagre, and, consequently, the depleted condition of the treasury did not enable the manager to discharge his financial obligations promptly, and prominent members of the company withdrew from time to time, until there were scarcely sufficient in numbers left to give a performance. On Wednesday evening, 7th, the climax was reached. A fair audience was assembled, who waited patiently until half past eight for the curtain to rise. The band was not in their accustomed places, and the air was pregnant with disappointment. Suddenly the gaslights were turned down, and immediately the footlights flashed their brightest as Mr. E. Johnston, clad in full Indian costume, stepped in front of the curtain, and blandly announced that "owing to the illness of one of the performers, and

THE LADIES AND GENTLEMEN engaged for De Bar's Opera House, St. Louis, Mo., are requested, through a card in another column, to meet on the stage on Aug. 29th.

THE SEVENTH REVIVAL of "The Black Crook" was inaugurated at the Academy of Music, Buffalo, N. Y., on the evening of the 5th. Our correspondent, "Typo," writing on Aug. 8th, says:—"The cast remained nearly the same as on its last production. Miss Augusta Chambers played Stalacta, Miss Emma Wesner, Carline, and Herr Wiltio, Dragonda. The premiere danseuses were M'lles Betty and Emily Rigi; the secundos, the Misses Laura Belle, Wesner, Marie and Josephine; coryphees, the Misses Lillian, Helene, Mignon, Katrine, Lizette and Hortense. Signor Cellini acted as maitre de ballet, with an acceptable group of pupils. Herr Wiltio, contortionist, M'lle Zittella and the Varetta Brothers, acrobats and gymnasts, made their first appearances. The scenery (partially new) reflected great credit on Mr. Stanfield. The play was fairly rendered by the company, and drew medium-sized houses through the week. It will hold the boards a week longer."

ANY PERSON desiring to invest a few hundred dollars in theatrical business are referred to John Dewer's advertisement.

DRAMATIC MATTERS in California are reported by our San Francisco correspondent as follows, under date of Aug. 3d.:—"Joe Murphy closes his five weeks' engagement at the Metropolitan Theatre on Aug. 4th. It has been fairly successful, although the attendance has been but moderate lately. Murphy received a benefit on the 1st, when the attractions were 'More Blunders than One,' songs and dances, and 'Barney, the Baron.' On the 5th Miss Ada Gray commences a star engagement in a translation of the French drama, 'L'Article 47.' Pantomime season will be given in September, when Pea's 'Humpty Dumpty' will be produced, with Tony Denier as the clown. Hinckley is the inventor of the ship scene in the sensational drama of 'The Red Pocket Book,' for which Proctor has purchased the right of production in the eastern states.....Virginia City appears to be the only good show town in the interior, Sacramento, Stockton, San Jose, etc., once profitable towns for theatrical speculation, having been almost entirely ignored by managers during the past season."

AT FOX'S AMERICAN THEATRE, Philadelphia, the appearance of several new stars and an entire change of programme were instrumental in attracting large audiences during the week ending August 10th. The new appearances were Miss Lucy Adams, J. H. Milburn, Chas. A. Gardner, Lew and Frank Collins and Master Clarence Burton. The very clever serio-comic singing of J. H. Kilburn seemed to afford much satisfaction, Miss Lucy Adams sang with much animation some serio-comic songs, and was favorably received, as was also Lew and Frank Collins and Master Clarence Burton, in songs and dances. Charles A. Gardner, as usual, was warmly welcomed in his Dutch vocalism. The lengthy programme embraced other attractive features, prominent among which were the feats of magic by the Pharazyn Brothers, Gus Williams in his excellent Dutch vocalism, and the ballets of "La Sultana" and "La Hongrois." The performance concluded with the comic trick pantomime of "The Magic Trumpet," in which Alexander Zanfretta and T. M. Vance, in the roles of clown and pantaloon, display an abundance of grotesque humor, and Miss Josie Zanfretta is a nimble, graceful harlequin. Gus Williams closed on the 10th inst. The La Verde children, Fannie, Lucelle and Carrie Haines, open on the 12th inst. A considerable sum of money has been expended on the decoration and embellishment of this theatre, which is now, without exception, one of the prettiest in the country. The removal of the old wooden partitions in the boxes and the substituting of iron railing in the balcony, besides adding to the seating capacity, considerably improves the appearance of the auditorium. The theatre has been entirely renovated and repainted, the walls leading to the balcony covered with mirrors, and the floors have been re-carpeted in anticipation of the fall and winter season, which commences on the 12th inst., and on and after that date the theatre will be a family resort every evening except Saturday, which has been reserved as a "gentlemen's night." A handsome new illuminated jet sign has been placed in front of the theatre. Mr. Fox's liberality in producing such a magnificent place of entertainment is deserving of all possible success.

THE WALNUT STREET THEATRE, Philadelphia, opens Monday evening, the 12th, with the Vokes Family, and a dramatic company, including Miss Jennie Lee. The Vokes' specialty, "The Belgian Kitchen," will be the piece de resistance during their engagement, which is limited to a week, the dramatic company appearing in the comedy of "Kind to a Fault." The regular fall and winter season at this theatre will commence on the 24th inst., Andrew Halliday's drama of "Notre Dame" being the first novelty produced here.

MISS CHARLOTTE THOMPSON will commence a short summer season at the Arch Street Theatre, Philadelphia, on the 12th inst., with the new and successful drama, "Woman's Will." Donnelly is acting as the business manager of Miss Thompson, and under his auspices the drama will be placed in its most attractive light before the Philadelphia play-goers.

MR. ADAM EVERLY, well and favorably known as one of the company of the Arch Street Theatre, Philadelphia, for several seasons, has retired from the stage to private life. Mr. Everly was a conscientious and capable actor, and his courtesy and urbanity towards all with whom he came in contact made him many friends, who will be glad to hear of his success in his new vocation.

MR. WM. DAVIDGE, JR., son of the talented comedian of the same name, and a most promising chip of the old block, has been engaged for the fall and winter season at Oak Wood's Museum, Philadelphia, by Dodge, Jr., for some time past has been connected with the Norman Opera Troupe, in Toronto, Canada, where his ability as a comedian was the subject of many encomiums.

AT COL. WOOD'S MUSEUM, Philadelphia, Mr. J. Z. Little and Miss Lizzie Campbell commenced a one week's engagement on the 5th inst., appearing in a romantic drama entitled "Woman's Will," which was favorably received, although not strikingly original. An amount of interest greater than usual is involved in the story, despite the rather improbable nature of the plot, which would have been more intelligible if the audience had been less enthusiastic. Mr. J. Z. Little acted in a creditable manner the character of Harry Turrett, and Miss Lizzie Campbell enacted Blanche Kirby with pleasing effect. The drama attracted fair audiences during the week ending Aug 10th. The lecture-room will be closed this week, but will be re-opened on the 19th for the regular fall and winter season with the following company: Frank Evans, leading man; Charles H. Carton, Tony Hartwell, Miss Annie Adams, Miss Blanche Selwyn, the Loverdi children and Fredk Gibsone. The persons composing the ballet will be Miss Jennette Prescott and Miss Josephine Selwyn, Antoinette Rudolfi, Miles Caroline Schroetter, Gabrielle Schroetter, Henrietta Schroetter, the Misses Virt Parrand, Josephine Kurtz, Mlle Machecke, the Misses Gillie Eastman, Nellie Atkinson, Susie Chapelon, Nellie Young, Frank Christie, Florence Truman, Emma Brace, Annie Donnelly and Miss Gillespie; Fred. The scenery will be by Palmer and Hoyt; freezing by John Stulen; upholstering by Kleinert; painting by Palmer; paper hangings by Hughes and Co., and carpenter work by J. B. Poor and Co. The first rehearsal is called for the 15th inst."

Mortimer's Philadelphia Varieties will be opened on the 26th inst., with an entirely new company, and one superior in several respects to former seasons. During the summer vacation the theatre has been renovated and re-decorated, and now presents a much improved appearance.

C. A. Hatch, advance agent and treasurer, advertises that he can be engaged.

George W. Humphrey, advance and business agent, who for the past ten months has been with the Martinetti-Raval pantomime troupe, can be engaged after Sept. 1st. His address is care of this office.

Bill Postings are ordered to U. S. M's cards in another column.

Performers and others are notified by an advertisement that the opening of Switzer's Variety Theatre, Harrisburg, Pa., has been indefinitely postponed.

Wm. A. Hitherly, banjoist, who can be addressed care of this office, will be at liberty after Sept. 1st, when he will have terminated a six months' engagement with the Martinetti-Raval pantomime troupe.

In Memphis, Tenn., the only place of amusement open at present is Broom's Opera House. Among the new appearances since our last letter we may notice Mr. J. W. Regan, Irish comedian and vocalist, who has already made himself quite popular; Millie Rosa, an old favorite; Miss Ida Morton and Miss Pauline, the two first named accomplished in the Terpsichorean art, and the latter a bewitching vocalist. Frank Jones, who has been with us but a short time comparatively, is contesting the palm for popularity with the favorite comedian, Chas. Perle, and it is hard to say which is the liveliest darky. Susie Starr remains queen of the dance, though she has lost an important adjunct in the person of her sister, Phatia, who has gone to Little Rock, Ark., to fill an engagement at Wood's Opera House. Señorita Philomena does her songs and dances to appreciative audiences. Miss Lizzie Lamereaux, the popular vocalist, has concluded her engagement at Broom's and gone to Cincinnati, O. Quite an interesting event took place at the Opera House a few evenings ago, the occasion being a complimentary benefit to Manager Marsh Adams. Just as the gentleman finished his popular act of "Old Black Joe," a gentleman stepped up from the audience, and arresting Adams' retreat from the stage, caned him about a hundred dollars' worth. The inscription on the head is "To Marsh Adams from his many friends."..... The Grand Opera House opens about the first of October, and the new Memphis Theatre in the middle of September.....The Olympic Varieties is receiving the finishing touches, and will open about the 1st prox. So wrote our correspondent on August 7th.

At the Walnut Street Theatre, Kansas City, Mo., on August 9th, the Barlow Brothers reappeared, and the Lilliputian song and dance man, General Grant, Jr., made his first bow to a crowded house. The general bids fair to become a favorite at this the Variety Home, are a big card in the way of double jig or double character dances. Harry Hart, J. W. Berkely and Nellie Edwards, vocalist, are still there. Oscar Willis, stage manager, in his negro acts, keeps his place high in the public favor. In the line of banjo playing and in comic songs, James Gaynor takes well. Maggie Nichols, slack wire performer; Lola Maseco, in her parlor pictures, and Maude De Lisle, vocalist, continue. Mlle. Julia has proved a profitable card to the Walnut. "Under the Gas Lamp" is given as an afterpiece, Maude De Lisle making it attractive with a pretty song, plaintively sung, and the inimitable Willis doing the Corn Doctor. Bls. was light during the latter portion of the week, owing to the presence of Lent's Circus, but is good now. Billy Banks, Maggie Louise, Mattie Lincoln, Maud Lewis and Prof. Gifford, leader of orchestra, have gone to Carroll's Theatre at Wichita. The Clark Sisters and Ched Guage Lamereaux open at the Walnut Friday night, and the Lamonte Bros., gymnasts, and Jacques Kruger, are announced for August 19th.....The following people are at the Theatre Comique:—Julia Nelson, Dave Williams, Jim Hays, Fred Shaw and Dora Antonio, vocalist. Julia Drew and Adele Mason are underlined. Business moderate." So wrote our correspondent on Aug. 8th.

Delehanty and Hengler, who are now performing at the Alhambra Theatre, San Francisco, Cal., have made a hit. We excerpt the following commentary upon their performances from one of the papers published in that city:—

"The theatre was crowded in every part last night, when the famous song and dance men, Delehanty and Hengler, made their first appearance. These artists more than came up to the high reputation which had preceded them, and by the originality of their style, neat execution, and quickness of movement, at once established themselves as favorites with the audience. The dancers seem to be masters of every possible step, and they sing better than the generality of song and dance men. They received no less than six encores last night, and then the encores were endless, though they could see that the performers were pretty nearly fagged out by their thorough hard work, would have liked a little more Delehanty and Hengler."

Looney's Varieties, late Allen's, St. Louis, Mo., having been re-modelled and re-fitted, was opened on Aug. 10th.

Tony Pastor and his traveling company is billed ahead as follows:—Akron, O., Aug. 12th; Meadville, Pa., 13th; Titusville, 14th; Buffalo, N. Y., 15th, 16th and 17th; Rochester, 19th, Auburn, 20th; Syracuse, 21st; Oswego, 22d; Rome, 23d, and Saratoga, 24th and 26th.

Business at Acker's Arcade Gardens, Troy, N. Y., continues very good. The Great brothers—Charlie, George and Willie—were the attraction the past week and made an immense hit in their specialties of songs and dances. They seem to have taken the strongest hold upon the patrons of this house of any artists that have appeared there so far, and are excellent performers. Bobby Stanton, Ethiopian comedian; Gus Mills, the female impersonator, and Johnny Henshaw, eccentric comedian, remain another week. Barney Reynolds, Dutch comedian, is announced to open Aug. 12th.....Harry Robinson's Combination Troupe show at Rand's Hall on the 24th.

Ada Gr. Claire, Kate Hanley and Ned Reed were the arrivals at the Theatre Comique, Cleveland, O., on the 5th inst., and the departures on the 10th, Harry and Fannie Wood, to the Blanchard's Coliseum, Rochester, N. Y., for one week, and thence to the Howard Athenæum, Boston, Mass., for the season; Minnie Gray, to East Saginaw, Mich.; Hannah Birch, Dick Gorman, Gus. Peters and Mlle Annetta, to Detroit; the latter two do not open until the 26th. The business during the week ending Aug. 10th, has been very large, embracing most everything in the variety line, concluding with the spectacular burlesque of "The Nymphs," introducing a song and dance by Turner and Lister, "The Apple of My Eye," also the Can-can by the entire company. Business has been generally good.

Negro Minstrelsy.

Newcomb's Minstrels entered upon their second week at Wood's Theatre, Cincinnati, O., on the 5th, and of them our correspondent, dating the 9th, writes:—"They have had another week of big houses, which, at this season of the year, shows what a great attraction a dim chance at a prize is. The cash distribution per night has been increased this week to $400, with $200 at the matinee, or $2,000 for the week, which is a pretty fair give away, and seems to please the people. Mr. Murphy has been added to the party and has been installed as interlocutor. McKee and Rogers closed with the past week to take a recreation. They were among the chief attractions of the troupe. J. F. Dunnie, who has been lately acting as business agent, severed connection this week, to take the position of passenger agent in New York on the Baltimore and Cincinnati railway. The programme presented was one eminently adapted to display the talents of this capital organization to the best advantage, and ensured them a favorable reception from large audiences during the week. Billy Emerson and Ben Cotton elicited much merriment and applause, and J. W. Lamont, Monroe Dempster and Charles Heywood finely rendered their ballads. Billy Emerson, in his capital songs and dances and Harry Simpson, in banjo solos, made a great hit, although Sheridan and Mack certainly carried off the honors each evening, their capital singing, dancing and costuming eliciting symptoms of approval of the most unequivocal nature, their "Little Fraud" invariably obtaining an encore. The solo on the saxophone, by Ed. Lefebre, is worthy of high commendation for its execution. The operatic sketch of "Ill-Treat-Bad-Deer" concluded the programme, with Charles Heywood as Lean-or-ar, and he sang his music in a manner to prove that his voice, tone and style had much improved since his last appearance in Philadelphia. A complete change of programme was made during the last three evenings of their engagement, Payette Welch taking Ben Cotton's place on the end in the first part. The excellent orchestra was a prominent feature of this troupe, playing, as they did, with an expression and unity seldom surpassed.

Moran and Dibby's Minstrels will inaugurate their fall and winter season at the Eleventh Street Opera House, Philadelphia, on Monday evening, August 26th, with a company including several new favorites. Mr. Wm. Hamilton, the baritone, and Prof. Jesse Williams, musical director, are mentioned as members of the new troupe.

The Fall and Winter campaign at the Arch Street Opera House, Philadelphia, will be commenced on the 26th inst., by Simmons and Slocum's Minstrels, with a company much strengthened in every department. Jasper H. Rost will act as Musical Director, and M. Ainsley Scott, Add Ryman and Sam Rickey are mentioned as among the new acquisitions.

Rowland Brothers' Minstrels are to perform as follows:—In Wilmington, Del., Aug. 14th; Trenton, N. J., 20th; Norwalk, Conn., 21st; New Haven, 22d; Providence, R. I., 23d; Lowell, Mass., 24th, and Boston, one week, at the St. James' Theatre, opening on the 26th. John L. Woolsey has lately been added to the vocal corps, which now comprises T. Bernardo, James H. Collins, Frank Brainard, J. Dixon, J. L. Woolsey, D. H. Smith and A. S. Morris.

Master Tommy, who is supposed to be playing with the Eureka Minstrels in the far west, is requested to communicate at once with his mother.

Hughes & Mudge's Minstrels are billed to commence a three nights' season at Halifax, N. S., on Aug. 19th.

The performers engaged for Harry Robinson's minstrels are requested to assemble for rehearsal at Troy, N. Y., on Aug. 15th. See advertisement.

Dan Bryant's Minstrels performed at Newport, R. I., Aug 10th, and were billed at Troy, N. Y., for the 12th.

James Norris, late with Simmons and Slocum's minstrels, of Philadelphia, Pa., is at Newark, N. J., on a visit to his mother. He has just returned from a successful engagement with Gaskin's Minstrels, San Francisco, Cal., and is in the best of health and spirits. Mr. Norris opens with the San Francisco Minstrels, at St. James Hall, N. Y., on the 26th inst.

Billy Manning, "the prince of rural cork comedians," was the recipient of a benefit at Masonic Temple, Louisville, Ky., the 3d inst., tendered to him by home talent, and largely attended. Mr. Manning has more friends, and is a better favorite than any colored minstrel that has performed here, and his benefit was enjoyed in his honest style. The performance commenced with exercises on the horizontal bar, by the Athletic Club, the members of which are deserving of much praise for their proficiency; Will. S. Hayes sang several of his beautiful ballads, which were encored to the echo; "Miss Pittsburg Party," by Manning and Powers, and "One Night in a Bar Room," by Manning and company, created a fresh excitement. The performance concluded with a burlesque gift distribution, showing how the thing is done. Mr. Manning was called before the curtain, and in a short, witty speech, thanked the audience for their liberal patronage. The receipts were about $700. Manning will organize a company and take the road.

Bohlke's Minstrels, at the Globe Theatre, Chicago, Ill., are meeting with fair success. The prominent features of the bill, in addition to the first part, which is first-class, are the song and dance by the popular Hurley and Mack; "The Lawyer's Clerk," by John Mailman and Geo. Wilson, and "Old Uncle Ned," by Billy Rice and Ingalls. Archey Hughes and the company. This week will be their last at this place, after which they open in Milwaukee, Wis., for one week, commencing on the 19th. They will then play through Wisconsin and open at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, on the 3d Sept.....Billy Arlington has joined Cal. Wagner's Minstrels, and will play with them until the opening of Hyers' new Opera House, when he will return to Hyers' party, consisting of J. K. Kemble, San Cotton and others. The style of the new company will be as before, Arlington, Cotton and Kemble's Minstrels.

Duprez and Benedict's Minstrels performed at the National Theatre, Washington, D. C., during the week ending August 10th, and attracted audiences which were remarkably large for the season of the year. The troupe is a large and exceedingly well organized many of the performers being really excellent, and a few of them unsurpassed in their peculiar lines of business. Their programme was pleasing and replete with novelties. In the first part Lew Benedict and George H. Edwards, on the ends, made things decidedly lively, and the sentimental singing of Messrs. Dupree, Smith and Bernarde won much applause. Ernest Linden then followed with a few feminine impersonations, which, barring their lack of refinement, were very fair, and he was succeeded by Fox and Ward in a double song and dance, which was well executed, as was also their double clog dance. Another feature of the bill was a burlesque on the jubilee, in which J. T. Gulick assumed the character of Guiltmore, the conductor, and Linden did Mme. Peschka Leutner. Taken altogether the company deserves the warm encomiums which they received from all sides, and the popularity they enjoy.....Emerson's Minstrels are billed to perform here on August 12th, 13th and 14th." So wrote our correspondent on Aug. 11th.

Duprez and Benedict's Minstrels are announced to perform at the Holliday Street Theatre, Baltimore, Md., for the week beginning Aug. 12th.

Emerson's California Minstrels will appear at the Concordia Opera House, Baltimore, Md., on Aug. 15th, 16th and 17th.

Frank A. Gardner, with Dan Rice's circus, made what the citizens of Lansing, Mich., consider an extraordinary leap at that city on Aug. 5th, as will be seen by H. W. Leach's card elsewhere.

With regard to the difficulty in Napoleon, O., between Hazlin, the clown of Robbins & Co.'s circus, and Mr. Stout, of that town, as published in the Chippen of Aug. 8d, we give place to the following letter:—

Unionville, O., Aug. 6th, 1872.

Frank Queen, Esq.—Dear Sir.—In your issue of Aug. 3d, I notice an article copied from the Democratic North West, stating that while Robbins & Co.'s Circus company was showing in Napoleon, O., they came near getting into a serious difficulty. The facts are simply these: Mr. Hazlin, the clown, went with his spotted dogs, in a saloon, and asked him what he would take for the dogs, as I took quite a fancy to them. I commenced petting one of the dogs and it snapped at me; I cuffed it, which I did not intend to hurt it, but after a few words Hazlin drew a pistol from his pocket and fired at me. For my own safety I returned him a blow and was arrested, paid my fine and returned to the company immediately. With regard to personal difficulty between Mr. Hazlin and myself, as Robbins & Co. have nothing about the matter until after it had occurred. Please insert this in your next issue, and thus save me and the company from any disgrace which may result from the article in your paper.

Very respectfully, Oscar Hazlin,
Clown with Robbins & Co.'s Circus.

The above I believe to be a correct statement.
Frank Robbins, Robbins & Co.'s Circus.

James Robinson's Circus is meeting with great success in Canada. At Toronto, Ont., on Aug. 2d, the sale of tickets was stopped at eight o'clock, and hundreds of people were unable to procure admission; large audiences were also assembled at the afternoon and evening performances of the 3d. After their performances in Buffalo, on the 12th and 13th, they will come down the Erie road to New York city, where they will open a short season near the corner of 46th street and Madison avenue. James Robinson is said to be riding better than he has done for two or three years, and as he has not performed in New York during some four years, he should prove a great card. Frank Paxton's pad riding is highly commended, and it is seldom that a circus contains two as good riders. Frank is also a partner in the show.

Considerable rivalry seems to exist between the equestrians attached to Lent's circus and Barnum's show. Charley Fish, of the former, states that he "is willing to jump at Bartlit at any of his poses in short, [illegible]

J. L. Toole was on a provincial tour and announced to play at Oldham, Eng., July 29th and 30th; Rochdale, 31st; Wigan, Aug. 1st; Preston, 2d and Bolton, 3d.

Eugenie Paredaran was announced to play in "Rhine Gold" at the following theatres:—Princess', Monday, August 5th; Aug. 12th infant, and Theatre Royal, Shelbourne, Sept. 9th in Dublin, Ireland. She was acting in the "Grand Duchess" at the Queen's Theatre, Dublin, Ireland. It is he has proved himself a capital comedian, and has brought out the most salient points of the role with equal effect and go.....Miss Kate Terry, sister of Ellen Terry, made her début at Drury Lane, London, Eng., July 13th, as Portia, in "The Merchant of Venice," and was received with much favor. She is the daughter of the late Fred. Terry, who married Whitehurst, a London merchant, and his wife, who was divorced in 1858. His greatest successes were achieved in the leading parts of genteel comedy. Philip Edward, the second name of Fred. Terry, was given to him in honor of the opera singer, but he found the dramatic stage better suited to his powers. He possessed less natural genius than any of the family, but made up for its deficiency by close study. He published a work on "Elocution and Gesture," which is considered a standard author, some twenty years since, which included a history of the German drama. The subject of our obituary, the fifty-seventh, inherited all his mother's genius, to which he added his own energy and perseverance. Fanny Kemble was performing on the night that the news of the Emperor Napoleon's death was received. The audience was greatly excited, and the result was that Fanny Kemble was called before the curtain and the audience singing "God Save the Queen." Her husband was at once engaged at a liberal salary by the proprietor of the Royal Theatre, Sadlers Wells, where he remained for many years. Fanny Kemble is a woman of the highest order, and is as much admired for her genius as for her beauty. Her father, Charles Kemble, was a celebrated poet, Goethe, pronounced masterly, and received through him a laudatory offer to act upon the Weimar stage, which he declined. He remained for ten years at Brunswick, constantly adding to his reputation as a dramatic actor. Fanny Kemble was the eldest of his children, by Marcella Decamp, a celebrated comic actress in 1829, from whom he was divorced in 1841. He accepted in 1837 a position at the Royal Theatre, Dresden, and was the first dramatic actor to bring it into favor. He died in 1854, and was buried in Dresden. It is said he has proved himself a learned author of both sides. Lord Shaftesbury had received an honorable letter from "a lad of seventeen," from which he quoted the following somewhat remarkable statement:—"No other chap in the world is so supple and can tumble and twist like me. My father trained me into it. He began by twisting my limbs and backbones when I was a little baby. I used to suffer dreadfully, and I remember, when I was from four to nine years old, he used to make me twist myself and remain twisted up till my bones ached with pain. We fear some wag has been hoaxing his lordship.

Astley's Undaunted Heiress.—This renowned property was offered for sale in London, England, by public auction, on July 23d. There was a large attendance, including several well known theatrical managers and members of the dramatic profession. E. T. Smith opened the bidding by an offer of £5,000, and beyond that only three bids were made, the final one being £8,500. The property was bought in for Mrs. Batty at the nominal figure of £10,000.

Miscellaneous.

FAREWELL TO AMERICA.

By Rollin Howard, who Departed on "The Egypt," for England, Aug. 10th, 1872.

As now I leave thee, happy land,
Home of childhood and friends most dear,
Come let me clasp thy friendly hand,
And, Oh! forgive the sigh that's here.
For travels long years, I bear in mind,
Yet warm, true heart pains I have known;
I know abroad I ne'er shall find
Such deep love as to me you've shown.
Then let me not say, "Fare-thee-well,"
But speak in hope the word, "Good-bye;"
To them that I do prize so well,
My home, my friends, my dear country;
Think not I have forgot you all;
Though strangers' words I receive,
My soul will 'ess your love recall.
My heart, my love, with thee I leave.

FOREIGN SHOW NEWS.

Dramatic.

As the seasons of parliament draws to a close, the managers of the various theatres in London, Eng., make preparations for closing their respective houses. From our foreign files, dated July 20th, we clean the following: "A new drama, entitled 'Dead or Alive,' by Tom Taylor, was produced at the Queen's on July 15d, an account of which will be found in another part of the paper.....The season for the Royal General Theatrical Fund, at Drury Lane Theatre, on July 24th, when Mr. Sothern acted Lord Dundreary in "Our American Cousin," yielded, although the weather was very hot, a sum closely approaching £400. Mr. Edmund Yates, who played Asa Trenchard, it is said (but he will contradict the audience in favor by the humor he infused into the part." Mr. Lytton Sothern (one of the popular comedians) made his first appearance in the part of Lieut Vernon, and "by the gentlemanly ease with which he wore the uniform of the service, did it more excellence." Mr. Sothern, in the course of his address to the audience, stated that he would probably return to the Haymarket next year, and that are going he would introduce Mr. Edmund Yates, Mrs. Dundreary's father and mother.....The season at the Princess' closed on July 15th; at the Lyceum, the Prince of Wales', St. James', and the Court theatres on the 20th.....No change at the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden, Drury Lane, Her Majesty's, "Jack Sheppard" and "Flying Scud" Morning, at the Alhambra, "La Sal Carrosse" produced to forty-eight performances, and on July 27th.....At the Victoria, the "Reign of Terror" and "Life in Paris" have great success on July 27th.....At the Grecian, Griffith's new comedy of "Paul; or, A Sailor's Love," was announced for production July 29th.....At the new Pavilion, "The House To Let" and "Nearly Lost" were to have been produced on July 29th.....At the Mast Lessees, in Paris, on July 6th, Vaudeville and ballet were specially engaged to appear in "Quilter or Not Guilty," and "Ohe Ohe!".....It ceased to the Vaudeville, Paris, on July 6th.

Musical.

At Her Majesty's Opera, Drury Lane, London, Eng., Sig. Campanini took a benefit on July 23d, singing in "Il Trovatore." On the 24th "La Rosa" was repeated. Mlle. Titiens received a benefit on the 25th, singing in "Lucrezia Borgia," and on the 27th the season closed with "Semiramide," for Mlle. Nilsson's benefit.

The Opera Bouffe Company from the Prince of Wales Theatre, Liverpool, Eng., playing "Genevieve de Brabant," were to have commenced their engagement at the Royalty, London, on July 29th.

Hussar Leader's Opera Bouffe Company, at our latest advices, were in the fourth week of a successful season at Edinburgh, Scotland.

Madame Morton's Opera Bouffe Company, under the direction of Miss Emily Soldene, was announced for Glasgow, Scotland, July 29th; Edinburgh, Aug. 12th; Newcastle, Eng., 19th, and Leeds, Sept. 2d.

Dan Godfrey and the Grenadier Guards Band, on the day after their arrival in Liverpool, Eng., gave a concert at Philharmonic Hall, in that town, for the benefit of the organ fund of one of the churches. With the day's announcement, enough people were attracted to fill the hall twice over.

The last week but two of the present season of Mr. and Mrs. Germon Rose's musical entertainments at the Royal Gallery of Illustration, London, Eng., was to have commenced July 29th.

Adelina Patti, at the request of Mme. Thiers, is to sing once in Paris, France, for the benefit of sufferers from the war. "Les Huguenots" will constitute the programme. She will sing at Homburg for a few nights prior to her engagement at St. Petersburg, and from there will go to Vienna, to play during the first two months of the exhibition, and will be in London in May, 1873, at Covent Garden, where she has renewed her engagement for two years, at £800 per night, reserving her own repertoire. At the end of the season 1873 Madame Patti will make a tour in the United States, under the direction of her brother-in-law, Herr Maurice Strakosch.

Signor Mario, it is stated, has been lately singing at Rome, Italy, privately at first, with decided success, the Italian journals speaking in the highest terms of his voice and style.

The Frances Family are announced to leave for America, where they are to appear at the Olympic Theatre, New York.

Variety Halls.

But few changes have occurred at the London, Eng., music halls. At the London Pavilion, the Court Minstrels, Mlle Delorange, sentimental vocalist, together with Persivani and Van de Velde acrobats, were the front appearances.....At the South London Palace, J. B. Johnson, champion wrestler, and the "hero of London Bridge," was the new and chief feature.....At the Metropolitan, Prof. Hermann, magician, had been specially engaged.

Alfred Glanville Vance, composer and vocal comedian, had started upon a provincial tour with a newly organised company, consisting of the Misses Blanche Luther, soprano and soubrette; Nellie Bunnett, comedienne and dancer; Miss Kate Rivers, Miss Macdonald, balladist; Messrs Lindon Travers, bass, and Joseph Holbrook, composer and musical director. They were to have performed at Ramsgate, Eng., during the week ending Aug 3d.

The Spanish Minstrels, Mlle Dasher and Mlle Van Norden in the "Black Crook," are now at the New Star Music Hall, Liverpool, Eng.

Mlle Dolorna and her troupe of dancers are performing at Marseilles, France.

Mlle Hedwig Austin and her ballet corps are at Berlin, Germany.

Circuses.

Astley, the wife of George Ferdinand, the equestrian clown, died in London, Eng., July 23d, at the age of 37 years.....Hutchinson and Taylour's Circus was at Cardiff, Wales, at our last advices.....Robert Cooper's Circus, Gymnasium, Equestrian, Fowell and Clark's Circus was at Darlington, Eng., July 24th.....Ginnett's Circus was at Lancaster, Eng., July 25th.....Day's Menagerie, at our latest advices, was at Llandudno, Wales.....Cooke's Royal Circus was still at Liverpool, Eng.....Newsome's Circus was at Preston, Eng.....Mander's Menagerie was at Southampton, Eng.

Johnny Nick, it has been withdrawn in Parliament, but Lord Buckhurst gave notice that he should re-introduce it early next session. It has been virtually killed by the amount of nonsense talked on both sides. Lord Shaftesbury had received an honest letter from "a lad of seventeen," from which he quoted the following somewhat remarkable statement:—"No other chap in the world is so supple and can tumble and twist like me. My father trained me into it. He began by twisting my limbs and backbones when I was a little baby. I used to suffer dreadfully, and I remember, when I was from four to nine years old, he used to make me twist myself and remain twisted up till my bones ached with pain." We fear some wag has been hoaxing his lordship.

Astley's Undaunted Heiress.—This renowned property was offered for sale in London, England, by public auction, on July 23d. There was a large attendance, including several well known theatrical managers and members of the dramatic profession. E. T. Smith opened the bidding by an offer of £5,000, and beyond that only three bids were made, the final one being £8,500. The property was bought in for Mrs. Batty at the nominal figure of £10,000.

A midget show was to have been held at the North Woolwich, Eng., Royal Gardens on July 29th, 30th and 31st.

Prof. Bellenger, magician and ventriloquist, whose business agent, arrived in London, Eng., safely, on July 15th.

Prof. Bellenger and his new entertainment since his arrival in London, Eng., at the Royal Polytechnic, are highly spoken of. The same evening he gave an entertainment at the Cosmopolitan Gardens, and created a favorable impression. Arnold Jones, his business agent, has closed an engagement for the coming season for Mr. Silvester to play at the Alhambra.
